

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

GENERAL INDEX	81

PREFACE.

IT has been repeatedly asked, 'Of what possible use can the republication, translation, and editing of books like the Tiruvāṇṇam be?'—and, 'Who can be expected to desire to make themselves acquainted with such works?' This consideration has delayed the publication for some time; and it is not at all to be anticipated that the circulation of the book, at least in Europe, will, for some time to come, be encouraging. Still, this is a work that ought to be done! If the Tamil people and the English are ever in any degree to understand one another, and to appreciate each other's thoughts and feelings regarding the highest matters; if any progress is to be made in the developement of a real science of Hinduism, as it now is, our English people must have the means of obtaining some insight into the living system which exercises at the present day such a marvellous power over the minds of the great majority of the best Tamil people.

For, under some form or other, Ṣaivism is the real religion of the South of India, and of North Ceylon; and the Ṣaiva Siddhānta philosophy has, and deserves to have, far more influence than any other. The fifty-one poems which are here edited, translated, and annotated, are recited daily in all the great Ṣaiva temples of South India, are on every one's lips, and are as dear to the hearts of vast multitudes of excellent people there, as the Psalms of David are to Jews and Christians. The sacred mystic poetry of a people reveals their character and aspirations more truly than even their secular legends and ballads; for sacred hymns are continually sung by the devout of all ages, and both sexes; and all classes of the community are saturated with their influence. The attentive consideration of the system here developed must lead to a sympathetic appreciation of what the hopes, fears, aspirations, and yearnings of the devoutest Hindu minds in the South are, and have been from time immemorial. I have occasionally ventured in notes to go beyond the province of editor and translator, and have criticized many things here and there; yet I feel quite sure that my kind and candid friends in South India will be in no danger of misunderstanding the spirit in which I have written. These are times when in regard to all religious systems thorough rational investigation, searching historical criticism, and a careful candid consideration of the meaning of the symbols by which doctrines are supposed to be expressed, are quite necessary everywhere. The result of this searching, yet reverent, analysis has been and is,—ever more and more,—of the utmost value in the West. Whatever is TRUE will bear the test of the severest scrutiny, though men may feel obliged from time to time to modify the expressions of their belief, and to readjust their most cherished formulas. There is an evolution of religion. Meanwhile, TRUE DIVINE FAITH lives on, and grows more vigorously for the conflicts in which it is ever, of necessity, engaged.

It is much to be desired that our friends in South India should recognize this, and consent to enter upon a thorough scientific investigation of the historical foundations of their popular beliefs, the precise import of symbolical expressions, and the practical bearing of every portion of their wonderful 'Siddhāntam.'

In matters of religion the greatest hindrance,—and the most truly irreligious thing,—is the spirit of ignorant, unreasoning, unsympathetic antagonism. Every system has its truths and profounder thoughts; and these lie deeper than 'full fathoms five' in man's nature; and must be fundamentally and essentially in large measure the same for all men, and for all time. It is only by recognizing these common truths, and making them the basis of inquiry, as to further alleged Divine communications, that it is possible to gain a true religious developement.

Very many things celebrated in these remarkable poems are doubtless without even the shadow of historic foundation, but it is yet possible to feel a lively interest in some, at least, of them as poetic fancies. What seems graceful and touching to one people often excites laughter, or scorn, or even detestation, among others. So, in regard to symbols, it is quite certain that many expressions, figures of speech, and allegories, very dear to peoples in the West, have no significance whatever to those of the East. And very, very much that seems to Oriental minds edifying, is repellent to those of the West. Still, I think the time has really come when thoughtful and candid people may do much to remove the hindrances, that undoubtedly exist, to the closer union of the convictions and sentiments of devout men in East and West. I may add that nothing can be further from my purpose in this work, and more utterly distasteful to me, than theological controversy; and if in this work any one word of mine should give pain to any of my valued Tamil friends, I ask forgiveness in advance.

It seems also most desirable that all Europeans whose lot it is to dwell in the Tamil lands, or who anywhere set themselves to benefit their Tamil fellow-subjects,—and especially missionaries and teachers,—should take pains to know accurately the feelings and convictions of those for whom, and in the midst of whom, they work. For many years I have not ceased to say,—there in India, and here in Oxford,—to successive classes of students, ‘You must learn not only to think in Tamil, but also to feel in Tamil, if you are to be intelligible and useful among the Tamil people.’

This publication (the fruit of much weary toil) may help, it is trusted, all who desire to be helped, along this certainly difficult road.

It must be confessed, moreover, that I very earnestly wish also that my valued Tamil friends may be led to make the closer acquaintance of some of the magnificent collections of ‘sacred poetry’ existing in English. And this not only for the benefit (which must be great) of the individual student, but of Tamil literature. For no literature can stand alone.

I may safely take it for granted that my indulgent Tamil friends will not shrink from these Christian compositions, because they are full of the unstinted praises of Him Whom all acknowledge as the noblest, purest, best, and most self-sacrificing of those who have worn the garment of our mortality,—any more than I have shrunk from long and appreciative study of poems containing very much with which I can have but scanty sympathy¹. ‘Scrutinize all things: hold fast that which is good!’

I may add that my experience as a translator has taught me that to get even a glimpse of the thought of a real poet, the student must often go down into the depths, must use every means to put himself in sympathy with his author, must learn to think and feel with him, and so—it may be—at last come to understand him.

Some German and Latin hymns were translated 150 years ago by that wonderful Tamil scholar and poetic genius, the missionary Fabricius; and ‘Fabricius’ hymn-book’ has been, and deserved to be, the basis of nearly all the Christian Tamil hymnology. Though it is hardly classical, it is so vigorous and real in its tone, that it does not seem likely ever to lose its hold upon the affections of the Tamil Christian community. Nevertheless it is to be earnestly desired that the transfusion of much great European and sacred poetry into popular, easy, rhythmic Tamil verse resembling that of Māṇikka-Vāṇagar, should be attempted. If a foreigner has bestowed infinite pains (would that it had been with greater results!) on the study of the Tiruvāṇagam, perhaps some of the native scholars of South India, versed in English and Tamil, may be induced to inquire whether they cannot find fitting material for study, imitation, and translation in that inexhaustible mine of beauty and profound thought which is opened up in English sacred verse, from the Hebrew psalms down to the Christian poetry of the present day. Nothing of this sort can be expected to live and be effective among a people if not expressed in their own vernacular language, the 'vulgar tongue,' 'in which they were born.'

The speech of a dying people may, perhaps, be allowed to die; but this cannot be said of the Tamil race. Heaven forbid!

Dead languages have great uses. 'Even in their ashes live their wonted fires.' De mortuis nil nisi bonum!—yet, in many ways, the living tongues are better! One cannot tell what flowers may yet bloom, what fruits may yet ripen, on the hardy old trees. Let Tamilians cease to be ashamed of their vernacular!

There exists now much of what is called Christian Tamil, a dialect created by the Danish missionaries of Tranquehar; enriched by generations of Tanjore, German, and other missionaries; modified, purified, and refrigerated by the Swiss Rhenius and the very composite Tinnevely school; expanded and harmonized by Englishmen, amongst whom Bower (a Eurasian) was foremost in his day; and, finally, waiting now for the touch of some heaven-born genius among the Tamil community to make it as sweet and effective as any language on earth, living or dead.

Of that unique genius Beschi (see Preface to my Kurra!, for a history of this great man), and of De Nobilibus, and (in after days) of Ellis and Stokes,—with a multitude of others, such as Drew, Caldwell, and Percival, who advanced Tamil culture,—space forbids me here to speak.

Beschi—with his unnamed collaborators—has left what is a literature in itself, but—except certain prose books—tending more and more to become obsolete.

There has been at least one real native Christian poet, Vēthānāyaga Sāstriyār of Tanjore, whose writings should be collected and edited. Christian lyrics, of unequal value, abound. Mr. Webb, an able American missionary of Madura, did much to develop these. The 'Pilgrim's Progress' has been versified; and the first book of 'Paradise Lost,' by V. P. Subramanya Mudaliār, is a courageous attempt. Many more works might be cited, but this must suffice for Christian Tamil.

Amongst many others, Tirumūlar's Tirumantra, Tāyumānavar's poems, Paṭṭaṇattu Piḷḷai's poems, the Dēvāram, the Tiruviṇaipā, with various articles in 'The Light of Truth,' by N. B. and by P. A., exhibit at once the capabilities and needs of popular Tamil poetry.

Of old classical Tamil and its stores I have spoken elsewhere.

I am afraid I cannot recall more than two recent works which seem to me to give promise of a veritable re-descent in more modern attire of the Tamil Sarasvatī.

The distinguished author of Manōmaṇiyam, P. Suntharam Piḷḷai, has—too early for us—passed into the unseen. The copy he sent me (inscribed with characteristic modesty), 'Submitted to — with the author's best respects,' is to me a valued companion.

The little anonymous¹ volume—a first instalment—entitled 'Tāni-pāṇura-togai' seems to herald the advent of a new school to be heartily welcomed.

But Tamil—like Latin in the early Christian ages—must learn to adapt herself to the new order of things! Horace and Virgil would hardly have consented to part with their metrical system for the rhythms and rhymes of a later time; yet 'Dies Irae' and 'Veni Spiritus,' the poems of Richard and Adam of St. Victor, St. Bernard, and a multitude of others, came to dwell in the world's heart for ever; while Dante and all the great Italians are Latins!

The work of translation was here and there difficult, and I had to compare a great number of similar verses to get at the meaning. An anonymous scholar², who has written the only commentary I know on the Tiruvāṇṇam, confesses himself at a loss to explain, among others, Poems I–IV. I have altered a few things in accordance with his interpretations, but have often seen reasons for differing. The work is very able and learned.

² This was not published till my translation was in the press. Indeed the editor gives in his preface as one reason for the publication the fact that an Angalīyar (Englishman) was putting forth an English translation.

Generally my translation runs line for line with the original, and preserves something of its rhythm, where this did not interfere with fidelity to the sense.

Of the Tiruvāṇṇam itself nothing need be added to what is elsewhere said.

My thanks are due to the Secretary of State for India for a liberal subsidy ; to the Delegates of the Clarendon Press ; and to many Tamil friends (who do not desire their names to be mentioned).

A full list of subscribers and donors will be duly published.

To Mr. Pembrey (as in my former writings) I owe very much for his indefatigable co-operation.

I date this on my eightieth birthday. I find, by reference, that my first Tamil lesson was in 1837. This ends, as I suppose, a long life of devotion to Tamil studies. It is not without deep emotion that I thus bring to a close my life's literary work.

Some years ago, when this publication was hardly projected, one evening, after prayers, the writer was walking with the late Master of Balliol College in the quadrangle. The conversation turned upon Tamil legends, poetry and philosophy. At length, during a pause in the conversation, the Master said in a quick way peculiar to him, 'You must print it.' To this the natural answer was, 'Master! I have no patent of immortality, and the work would take very long.' I can see him now, as he turned round,—while the moonlight fell upon his white hair and kindly face,—and laid his hand upon my shoulder, saying, 'To have a great work in progress is the way to live long. You will live till you finish it.' I certainly did not think so then, though the words have often come to my mind as a prophecy, encouraging me when weary ; and they have been fulfilled, while he has passed out of sight.

To the memory of Benjamin Jowett, one of the kindest, and best, and most forbearing of friends,—to whom I owe, among much else, the opportunity of accomplishing this and other undertakings,—I venture to inscribe this volume with all gratitude and reverence.

May the blessing of his Master and mine crown the very imperfect work!

PART I.

THE LEGENDARY HISTORY

THE TAMIL POET, SAINT, AND SAGE

MĀṆIKKA-VĀÇAGAR,

WITH NOTES ON THE ÇAIVA SIDDHĀNTA SYSTEM OF RELIGION AND PHILOSOPHY.

THIS life of the Sage, with the notes appended, was presented in substance to the members of the Victoria Philosophical Society, read before them, and printed by them. With their consent these are now reprinted in a considerably enlarged form. The writer has to offer his warmest acknowledgments to the Council of that excellent Society, and especially to their Honorary Secretary, Captain Petrie. To them the publication of this work is in great measure due.

THE HISTORY OF MĀNIKKĀVAṢAGAR.

§ i. To his Conversion. T.V. Ū. P. I.

THE history of this remarkable man is involved in considerable obscurity; but, although we can only discern the dimmest outline of his figure amid the mists of South-Indian poetical tradition, it is quite certain that he actually existed; that these legends, interesting in themselves, have a considerable foundation in fact; and that this sage was the first in the long and every way remarkable series of devotees of Ćivan who engaged in the arduous work of recovering the south of India from the Buddhists and Jains. He is not however regarded in the Tamil lands as the greatest of the Ćaiva saints, that honour being reserved for *Tiru*² Āṇa Sambandhar, some of whose legends I have elsewhere given (Ind. Mag. and Review, 1897). Nor is it possible with even an approximation to certainty to fix his date. As he evidently flourished at the time when the influence of Buddhism in South India was decaying, if not dying out, there is good reason to suppose that he lived somewhere about the seventh or eighth century of our era. Some further confirmation of this supposition will be forthcoming. The authorities for his history, if we may call them such, really resolve themselves into two: his own writings, which are but sparingly autobiographical; and the very modern legendary poem called the *Vāthavūrar*³ Purāṇam (T.V. Ū. P.). This latter again is an amplification of the sections fifty-eight to sixty-one of the Madura Sthala Purāṇam, or, as it is commonly called, *Tiru Vilāiyādal*⁴ Purāṇam; and is utterly unhistorical. This latter

² Tiru is the Tamil equivalent of the Sanskrit śrī, 'blessed,' 'sacred,' and when prefixed to the names of persons corresponds to SAINT. The Tamil form of Sanskrit Āṇa is Āṇa, grā.

professes to be a translation of a portion of the Sanskrit 'Skandam,' and cannot itself be ancient, dating from about A.D. 1750 probably. The sixty-second and sixty-third sections give a summary of the sage's Madura experiences. Like other collections of the legends of Hindu temples, the Tiru Viḷaiyāḍal is full of the most extraordinary stories, from which it is well-nigh impossible to sift out any grains of historical truth. And the very florid Vāthavūrar Purāṇam is professedly a poetical romance. We must therefore rely chiefly upon the poems for a picture of the devotee, and even here a grave difficulty meets us at the outset. Multitudes of spurious writings, in India (as indeed elsewhere), are attributed to nearly every person of historic repute; and interpolations too are always to be suspected. The rivalry between opposing sects has greatly tended to this result; for each Guru must be represented as having left greater works than those of the Gurus of rival systems; and also his writings must be brought up to date, so as to lend unequivocal support to the most recent development of the tenets of the sect.

I shall give the story as I find it.

The sage was born at the town which goes by the name of Tiru-Vāthavūr on the river Vaigai, near to Madura; and it is said that, in consequence, the name given to him by his parents was Tiru-Vāthavūrar (= he of Sacred Vāthavūr). This is very doubtful. But he has two other names, as will appear in the sequel. The epithet by which he is chiefly known is Māṇikka-Vāṇagar (Sans. Māṇikya-Vāchaka = he whose utterances are rubies); and the title of his poems is Tiruvāṇagam (= divine utterance). His father was a Brāhman of the Āmāṭṭiya tribe (Sans. Āmātya = Councillor), whose name is not recorded. The king of Madura at the time was Arimarttanar (Sans. *Crusher of foes*¹).

The boy is represented as being from the first a prodigy of intellect, and it is gravely stated that in his sixteenth year he had exhausted the circle of ordinary Brahmanical learning, and especially was consummately learned in the *Āgamas*² of the Çaiva system. The fame of his learning and genius soon reached the king, who sent for the youth, conceived a vehement affection for him, and constituted him his prime minister, giving him the title of Tennavan-Brahma-Rāyan (=the Pāṇḍiyan's Brāhman king).

I. 55-192. The Tamil verse translation is by Parāṇḍi-ṁmūnivar. See also Nelson's Madura Manual.

² The Āgamas are said to be sacred writings inculcating Çaiva doctrines, and to be of equal authority with the Vedas. The names of twenty-eight of these are given. They were much later than the Upanishads. There is a mystery about them.

The poet (Kaḍavuḷ Mahāmunī) in his first canto, 16-24, invites us to contemplate the young and brilliant courtier as enjoying all the splendid luxury of Indra, king of gods, and shining amongst the other ministers and courtiers of the Pāṇḍiyan kingdom 'like a bright silver moon come down from heaven to earth, and moving resplendent in the midst of the surrounding stars.' He is arrayed in royal garments 'refulgent with the lustre of innumerable gems, borne aloft in a sumptuous litter, surrounded with horses and elephants, and overshadowed by a white umbrella of state rivalling the moon in the heavens.' The king, who is the incarnation of Justice, Wisdom, and Benevolence, leaves the government of the country entirely in his hands. Yet the balance of his equal mind is not disturbed by all this luxury and absolute authority; for he ever ponders the sacred writings which enshrine the truths of the Ćaiva faith, and assures himself that all these externals are but the bonds that imprison the deluded soul; and that this embodied life with all its vicissitudes must be renounced, shaken off and forsaken, in order that by Ćivan's grace he may attain the 'great release.' His soul is filled with an infinite pity as he sees the thronging multitudes, who, he knows, are passing ever through the round of births and deaths, and are in these fated embodiments suffering remediless woes. So, 'like those who suffer from the intense glare of heat, and seek refreshing shade, his soul dissolves in passionate longing for Ćivan, the loving Lord.' Yet, though he beholds men around him as souls imprisoned through ante-natal evil, and feels how profitless all human existence is, and how surely all sentient beings are mere actors walking in a vain show, he nevertheless continues with unflagging diligence to dispense impartial justice as his sovereign's representative; but there is ever one supreme desire in his soul: he yearns to meet with a guru who (so does Ćivan reveal Himself) would teach him the mystery of the 'five letters'¹ and the 'way of release'². 'As the tiny winged creatures go from flower to flower through every grove,' he sought out and held converse with the professors of different Çaiṇa schools, saying within his soul, 'Where shall I find the spotless Guru¹, who can expound to me the mysteries of the Āgamas?' In fact, the state of mind of the youthful prime minister was much like that in former generations of Sākya-muni or Gautama, and of all the great saints and sages whose names live in Indian tradition: the world's infinite woe oppressed him, and there was neither remedy nor teacher to be found. (NOTE V.) It is evident that at that period the faithful followers of the Çaiṇa system were few, and rival systems were in the ascendant. The king himself and his courtiers were probably but lukewarm in their religious profession. Jainism was everywhere.

The recital of these mental troubles, and the touching confession of his ignorance and youthful folly are to be found in many of his poems. (See especially No. V, The Sacred Cento, pp. 44-84.) They remind one most forcibly of the Confessions of St. Augustine, and we cannot help saying that, in our Tamil sage, we find a spirit congenial to that of the great doctor of the West.

The crisis was at hand. One day when the king was sitting in state in the midst of his nobles and dependant kings, messengers came announcing that, in a harbour in the territory of the Çōra king, ships had arrived with multitudes of horses of rare value, from the 'Aryan²' land. We may suppose that this means Arabia, and the whole legend points to the traffic ever carried on by coasting vessels between India and the western countries, from whence not goods only, but influential ideas also came. The king at once commissioned his confidential minister to proceed to Tiru-perun-turrai ('sacred-great-harbour')³ to buy these horses; and gave him an enormous treasure for their purchase. Māṇikka-Vāçagar, seated in a magnificent litter, set out accordingly in more than royal pomp, escorted by troops composed of mercenaries from every known eastern land. Never was progress more magnificent than that which the poet imagines. It is the last gleam of the predestined saint's secular glories. And thus through cities, over vast wildernesses and interposing hills (!), he made his way to the great western harbour, where he was to make his purchases. The curtain here falls at the end of the first act in the drama of the sage's history. His secular life is really ended. Like St. Paul journeying to Damascus, he is on the eve of an unexpected and decisive experience.

§ ii. Çivan Appears. The Sage's Conversion. T.V. Ū.P. II. 1-82.

And here the poet for a time leaves him journeying on, and introduces us, in the second canto, to a more splendid court than that of the Pāṇḍiyan king; to the court of Çivan Himself, where He sits enthroned with Umā by his side on the silver hill. (NOTE X.) There the God announces to the assembled deities his intention to visit earth, in the form of a guru or human teacher, that he may initiate and consummate the conversion and salvation of a disciple, who shall restore to all the Southern lands the teaching of the truth, and make the Tamil language for ever glorious with the 'nectar of sacred and devout poesy.' His adoring hosts are to accompany Him in the guise of disciples, for one of the titles of Çivan is 'Lord of Hosts.' (NOTE XII.) The poet has a great many beautiful verses, and some very fanciful ones, about this gracious advent of Çivan.

The trees put forth their verdure, the flowers exhale new fragrance, the birds sing on every branch, the beautiful grove around Tiru-perun-turrai is hushed in expectancy, when under a thick and spreading *Kuruntham*¹ tree, in human form, the mighty Guru takes his seat, attended by his hosts, all like Himself, in appearance Çaiva saints. Meanwhile the youthful prime minister, unconscious of the coming crisis, draws near the town with his gorgeous company, and hears from amid the grove solemn mysterious strains, the voices of the 999 saintly attendants of the God, who are chaunting the venerable Çaiva-Āgamas. He at once stops his royal cavalcade, and sends a messenger to inquire the source and reason of this sweet mystic music.

The answer is, that surrounded by a vast multitude of devotees, beneath a Kuruntham tree, there sits a venerable saintly Guru with braided lock, crowned with a garland of Kondrai, in majestic grace most like unto Çivan Himself.

Our traveller forthwith reverently alights, draws near, and at once is transported with rapture. He beholds a mystic Guru who has a rosary of scarlet Eleocarpus beads around his head and throat and breast; who is smeared with sacred ashes of dazzling white, has a third eye of fire in the centre of his resplendent forehead, and holds in his hand a book. 'What book is this?' he ventures to inquire. The answer is, 'It is the Çiva-nāna-bōdham.' We must pause to remark the daring anachronism of this reply. This celebrated work of the Tamil Aquinas, the great Meykaṇḍa-Dēvar, did not exist for at least two centuries after Māṇikka-Vāçagar's time. 'And what,' inquires the neophyte, 'is *Çivam*¹? What is Ñānam? and what is Bōdham?' 'Çivam,' was the God's reply, 'is the incomparable true and divine Essence. Ñānam is the science of that Essence. Bōdham is its right apprehension.' No sooner does this answer fall upon his ears than the inquirer, who has reached the exact stage of religious experience² that according to the Çaiva system renders him meet to hear and receive the Guru's words, exclaims, 'Henceforth I renounce all desires of worldly wealth and splendour. To me, Thy servant, viler than a dog, who worship at Thy feet, grant emancipation from corporeal bonds! Take me as Thy slave, O king of my soul!' Saying this, he stands weeping and worshipping at the Guru's feet. One of the chief of the surrounding host now intercedes for him as worthy to be taught the mystery of emancipating grace, and the God accordingly receives him, and bids the attendants prepare at once for his solemn initiation.

In the grove a stately tabernacle is prepared, surrounded with rich silken hangings, and adorned with myriads of fragrant blooming flowers and innumerable sparkling gems. In the midst a lofty seat is prepared for the Guru, and the neophyte is bathed with water from the Ganges, besprinkled with perfumes, and prepared for reception by a variety of minute ceremonies. He then presents food with many kinds of luscious fruits to the great Master, after which the initiation begins. The Mantras and holy texts are taught him. He hears these, while his faculties are absorbed in loving devotion. He then worships the sacred feet of the Guru, and places them reverently on his head³. With the impartation to him of all the mysteries of the Çaiva Siddhānta philosophy (NOTE XI), the initiation is complete.

And now, how changed is the youthful minister of state! He has become a Jīvan-muttar, who lives in a body still for a little while, but is one in feeling, soul, power and faculty with the Infinite Eternal. He has put off his rich garments and adornments, is besmeared with white ashes, and wears the peculiar habiliment of the ascetic. From his head depends the braided lock of the Çaiva devotee, one hand grasps the staff, and the other the mendicant's bowl: he has for ever renounced the world—all the worlds—save Çivan's self.

And he is faithful henceforward even to the end. In the whole legendary history of this sage, whatever we may think of the accuracy of many of its details, and whatever deductions we are compelled to make for the exaggerations that have grown up around the obscurity of the original facts, there stands out a real historical character, which seems to be a mixture of that of St. Paul and of St. Francis of Assisi. Under other circumstances what an apostle of the East might he have become! This is his conversion, as South India believes it; and in almost every poem he alludes to it, pouring forth his gratitude in ecstasies of thanksgiving, and again and again repeating the words 'I am Thine, save me!' His poetry lives in all Tamil hearts, and in the main and true essence of it deserves so to live!

The next step was,—and here it is difficult for us to see how the conduct of the new devotee can be justified,—to make over to the Guru and his attendants the whole of the treasure entrusted to him by his king for the purchase of horses. By initiation he has become the Guru's very own. All that he is and has belongs to his new Master. So, together with his own garments, jewels, and personal property, the whole of his late master's prodigious treasure is at once handed over to be distributed to the devotees of the God and to the poor!

§ iii. Events in Madura. T. V. Ū. P. II. 83-135.

Meanwhile the nobles who composed his escort beheld with astonishment the sudden transformation of the youthful minister, and were still more astounded at this misappropriation—as it certainly seemed to them—of the king's, their master's, property. So they ventured to draw near to the sacred assembly, and to expostulate respectfully; but Mānikka-Vāçagar sternly bade them depart,—for 'why,' said he, 'would you bring me back to earth's false employments?' Finding all their expostulations useless, they at length returned to Madura, and announced to the king that his favourite minister had become a Çaivite Sanniyāsi ('one who has renounced the world'), and had made away with all the money entrusted to him. As in the case of Daniel, there was jealousy at work no doubt, but Māṇikka-Vāṇagar was evidently not blameless, as seen at least from a mundane point of view. The king was exceedingly enraged, as was natural, and sent a peremptory order for his minister's instant return. When the royal order arrived and was presented to the new ascetic, his reply was, 'I know no king but Çivan, and even were Yaman's (the god of death) messengers to come to bear me away, my Master has conquered Yaman¹.' He then took the king's missive and spread it before the God asking for direction. Çivan smiled sweetly upon him, and bade him return fearlessly, and tell the king, that on the 19th of the month of Āvaṇi² the horses which he had been sent to purchase would arrive in Madura. The God also arrayed him in resplendent garments, and gave him a fitting chariot, together with a ruby (hence his name) of inestimable value which he was to present to the king. Accordingly, Māṇikka-Vāṇagar returned with the messengers, and stood before his former master, who sternly required him to account for his conduct. To this he submissively replied,—as the God had bidden him,—(though it seems to us to be false!) that the horses had been procured, and were waiting in Perun-turrai; but that he had not brought them with him now because the Brāhmans had assured him that the 19th of the month Āvaṇi was the propitious day for the transmission of these precious animals to Madura. He also presented the ruby, which filled the king with astonishment and delight, made him satisfied with the explanation, and caused him to regard the report of the others as a piece of mere envious detraction. So the time passed, till there were only two days wanting to the date fixed for the arrival of the horses. And now, one of the courtiers who had gained the ear of the king, represented the whole matter in its true light;—or rather, as it had appeared to all who had accompanied Māṇikka-Vāṇagar: 'Your majesty,' said he, 'is deceived; your prime minister on the outskirts of the city of Perun-turrai saw a Çaiva Guru of imposing appearance and apparent sanctity, whose disciple he at once became, and to whom he made over the whole of the treasure for the purposes of that sect! It would seem that they themselves, though they had seen everything, had no belief in the divinity of the Guru; and it is possible that they themselves were Jains, or Buddhists, who were rejoiced to have the opportunity of bringing this accusation against the Çaiva saint. It must be remembered too, that it is a fundamental doctrine of the Çaiva system that every Guru is in Çaiva eyes an absolute incarnation of the God; but to these non-Çaiva courtiers he was simply a sectarian mendicant. The king in consequence ordered Māṇikka-Vāçagar to be thrown into prison till he should restore the treasures he had misappropriated; and this, doubtless, seems to us to have been but just; yet the poet tells us, that all nature sympathised with the suffering saint; sun, moon and stars withdrew their light, trees drooped, and the whole creation languished. The sufferer in his prison meanwhile utters lamentations, and makes very touching appeals to the God in Whom he trusted. This part of the history is in truth very pathetic, and enjoys great popularity among Tamilians.

The second canto leaves him thus in prison, but the date of the promised arrival of the horses is at hand!

§ iv. The 'Horses.' T. V. Ū. P. III.

'It is the duty of the father to relieve the woes of his children,' and so Çivan appears at the appointed time with the promised horses. But here is seen a characteristic of the God upon which all the Çaiva writers delight to expatiate—His sportive character: He delights to astonish, to bewilder, even to delude the sons of men! So everything in the universe is the sport of Çivan. 'He disports himself in the universe and in the souls of individual men!.' His dance at Çithambaram² is the symbolic expression of this. So in this case the God gathers together a vast multitude of jackals from the forest around, converts them into magnificent chargers, gives them into the charge of all the inferior gods, who come disguised as grooms, while He Himself rides at the head of the troops, disguised as the merchant, who has brought the horses for sale from a distant land. The tidings reach the king: 'The purchased horses have actually arrived! An innumerable host, they cover the plains.

² See NOTE VII. 'Çithambaram.'

The heavens are dark with the dust of their feet.' Of course the king sees how wrongly he has treated his prime minister, who is at once released from prison, restored to favour, and goes forth with the king to inspect and receive the purchased horses. Wonderful indeed (and very prolix!) is the Tamil poet's description of the cavalcade, and of the good points of the horses. But the interest of the story centres in the advent of Çivan, whom Māṇikka-Vāçagar at once instinctively recognizes as his Master, but dares not openly worship, since the Deity willed to preserve His incognito. The mighty Divinity Himself stands before the Pāṇḍiyan king, horsewhip in hand, and concludes the bargain; when it appears that the horses delivered are worth four times the treasure that had been entrusted to the prime minister for the purchase! The delighted king gives dresses of honour to Çivan and the other disguised gods, but these they receive with manifest contempt, which greatly astonishes and irritates him. This is explained away, however, as the result of their foreign customs. The horses are delivered up to the king's grooms, the gods depart, the king and his minister go to their respective palaces, and darkness comes down over the land. But the tranquillity is short-lived; for before the dawn the whole city is roused by frightful howlings, which proceed from the royal mews. The newly-arrived jackal-horses have resumed their old forms, and are making night hideous with their howlings. They even fall upon the real horses and devour them; and after a tremendous fight and unspeakable confusion make their escape to their native jungles. The king now perceiving that he has been deceived, sends for the prime minister, and furiously upbraids him with the trick, and demands restitution of the treasure. Till this has been restored Māṇikka-Vāçagar is handed over to the tormentors, who take him down to the river now dry, and there expose him under the fierce noon-tide sun on the burning sand of the Vaigai with a huge stone on his back. Again he utters pathetic prayers, and appeals to his Master Who has deluded both him and the king. This brings us to the fourth canto, wherein the sage is finally vindicated. Of course it is known that the mighty Çivan carries in the midst of His bushy locks the river Ganges; so to that river-goddess He gives command that she shall rush down, filling the empty channel of the Vaigai, and inundating the city of Madura, the scene of the saint's sufferings. 'Like a herd of fierce elephants rushing from the mountains,' the waters of the Ganges come down and cause the river to overflow its banks, threatening to drown the city. The astonished and bewildered king and his courtiers are now sensible of their mistake, and the sage is once more restored to the royal favour, and entrusted with the task of directing the measures whereby the city is to be saved from destruction. Under his direction orders are given to the inhabitants to build a dam for their protection; and to each one is assigned the extent of wall for which he is responsible.

§ v. Çivan, a Carrier of Earth. T. V. Ū. P. III.

Now in the city was a poor woman, whose name was Çemana-Çelvi ('the true-hearted happy one'), a widow, who earned a scanty livelihood by selling rice-cakes. The order is given her to construct her share of the dam, but she cannot herself dig and carry earth, and she has no one to work for her, and no money wherewith to hire a substitute. In her despair she rushes to the temple of Çokka-Nāyagar¹ (under which name Çivan is still worshipped in the renowned temple at Madura). Her prayer in the temple is very touching. It comes to this at last, 'Helper of the helpless, I flee to Thee for succour!' Çivan is never appealed to in vain, and so He Himself comes in His own quaint way to her rescue. Just outside the shrine, as she is drying her tears, she sees a youthful rustic, a day labourer, clad in ragged garments, with a basket for carrying earth put on His head as a covering, and bearing a spade on His shoulder, who addresses her with the words, 'Will you hire me to do your work? I am hungry; feed me, and I will do whatever you bid me' (p. 173). The old woman was in raptures, for had not her prayer been answered? But O the wonder of it! She knew not the whole mystery. The coolie was none other than Çivan in servant's form², thus humbling Himself to bear the burdens of His living ones. So the God undertakes the task, eating the rice-cakes with undisguised delight, but doing His work in very eccentric fashion. It was another of His 'sports!' He ran backward and forward, threw a little earth here and a little earth there, danced wildly, and sang strange snatches of songs, till the inspectors of the work pronounced Him mad. Still, on the whole, His work seemed marvellously to prosper; for, in fact, the river knew Him, and shrank away back into its former narrow limits. At length the young coolly having eaten all the cakes, crowned all His eccentricities by quietly lying down on the river-bank, and falling asleep with the basket as a pillow. This is reported to the king. The impudent coolly is sent for, and having been with difficulty aroused from His slumber, stands before the king as a culprit, making however no defence. The angry king commands Him to be beaten. But when the first blow is struck, all the universe shudders. Every god in heaven and every sentient being on earth feels the blow. There goes up a shuddering cry from all creation. And when they look again, the God has disappeared¹.

§ vi. His Ministry. T.V. Ū. P. IV. 55—V. 44.

When intelligence of this is brought to Māṇikka-Vāṇagar, he is plunged into the deepest grief, both at the humiliation of the God, and because he himself had not been permitted to see and converse with Him. His lamentations and complaints in the poem are, as usual, in their way very beautiful, if somewhat hyperbolical. The king now pays the saint a visit, acknowledges all his mistakes, declares his unworthiness to have such a minister, and offers to resign to him the kingdom. The sage however has but one wish, and that is, to return to Perun-turrai, there to dwell at the feet of the God. His request is granted, and the king returns to his palace; while the sage, now released for ever from the entanglement of worldly affairs, finally puts off his courtier's dress, and assumes the garb of an ascetic. His conversion and consequent trials are over, and he enters upon the new life. From that day it was his one work to glorify his Master. He loses no time in returning to fall at his Guru's feet, and pour out all his soul in the Sacred Presence.

After some time the God announces to His disciples that as His design in coming to earth, namely the conversion and confirmation of the sage, is accomplished, He will now return to Kailāsa. To the 999 devotees who are His attendant hosts He gives the charge to remain in the grove with Māṇikka-Vāṇagar, worshipping and meditating until in the sacred tank fire appears, into which they are to cast themselves, and so pass home to their Master. They must patiently wait. And for the neophyte himself, a further trial is enjoined. He is to remain behind, even after all his companions have gone home, that he may establish throughout the whole Tamil country the faith of Çivan, and compose Tamil hymns which shall be the Vēdas of the South. The day of the ascension comes, and the Master departs, but halts under a Kondrai¹ tree, whither the sage follows Him, still begging that he may at once accompany Him, and be for ever at His side on the silver mount. 'Nay,' replies the God, 'learn rather to know that I am everywhere. While thou art doing My will, I am with thee. Wait patiently. In Uttara-kōçamaṅgai thou shalt be taught the mystery of the eight mystic powers². From thence thou shalt go from shrine to shrine, till in Çithambaram thou shalt discomfit the Buddhists, and then obtain thy consummation.' At length the God disappears, and Māṇikka-Vāçagar returns alone to the other devotees. Under the tree they set up a liṅgam, and worship night and day. It was then and there that the saint began his poetical compositions. Twenty-one of the fifty-one lyrical compositions he has left are marked as composed in Perun-turrai. They are all full of the glories of Çivan, the grace that found out and converted the singer, and the grief he feels at his enforced absence from his Master³. This last grief is intensified by the speedy departure of his companions⁴. One day as they were worshipping, a mystic flame blazed up in the centre of the tank, as Çivan had announced beforehand, and they, casting themselves into it, disappeared⁵.

And now the sage alone sits under the Kondrai tree from whence Çivan had ascended, and utters his lamentations. The marvellous poem, 'The Sacred Cento' (numbered five in the collection, p. 44), was then composed. It contains some of his finest verses. Thence begins a new phase of his life. He passes from town to town, worshipping at each shrine, and composing verses which are headed according to the place of their composition. The shrines he visited were however very few in comparison of those said to have been hallowed by the presence of Sambandhar and the other saints of the following cycle.

⁵ Lyric XXXII. 7.

The fifth canto brings the sage to the scene of his greatest achievements and of his consummation, Çithambaram. It will be remarked that he goes back to Madura and the Pāṇḍiyan kingdom no more. He is especially the saint of Çithambaram and the Çōra kingdom; and the remainder of his history is a continued glorification of the great northern shrine. Many of the hymns that he composed in reference to the God as manifested in Tillai are exceedingly beautiful¹. The note of sadness is almost absent, while the delight of constant worship in the court (Ambaram), where Çivan's dancing form is seen, fills him with rapture².

§ vii. The Sage and the Ceylon Buddhists. T.V. Ū.P. VI.

After awhile it seems that some ascetic from Çithambaram, either our sage himself, or one of his disciples, passed over to Ceylon, between which and the South of India there was much intercourse. The story represents the visitor as able to converse with the people. It would seem therefore that it was the north of Ceylon to which he went. He is in the garb of an ascetic of the severest order. Almost naked, with a rosary of Eleocarpus beads, his body smeared with white ashes, a staff with little bells in one hand and a skull in the other, he wanders about, living upon alms; and, whether he stands or sits or lies down, is always praising the Golden Porch (Çithambaram).

The Buddhists carry the tidings to the king, who sends for him. At first he refuses to go, saying, 'What have I, a mendicant, to do with kings?' At length, however, he stands before the king, and is confronted with the Buddhist guru, who is armed with the three Piṭakas of his law, and is as accomplished an ascetic as the Çaivite himself. 'What is this Golden Porch?' they ask. 'The sacred shrine where Çivan dances, and where the Çōra king ever worships.' It may be mentioned here that the curious legends of Çithambaram are summed up in the 'Kōyil Purāṇam,' of Umāpathi. (NOTE VII.) The result is that the Buddhist guru in insulting language announces his intention to visit the vaunted shrine, and tear the God from his throne.

The scene changes somewhat abruptly to Tillai or Çithambaram. The Buddhist guru with his company of devotees has come to Çithambaram and encamped within the temple enclosure. The king of Iṛam (Ceylon) with his court has also arrived, and with him a daughter who is dumb. The kings exchange courtesies, the king of Ceylon bringing tribute to the Çōra king as his feudal lord. It would almost seem as if there were in this legend a vague reminiscence of some great expedition of the king of Ceylon with the double intention of conquering the country and establishing Buddhism on the continent¹. The arrival of these strangers threw all Çithambaram into confusion. The 3,000 devotees of the temple wish to expel the intruders by violence, but the God Himself appears to them in a dream, and orders them to send for Māṇikka-Vāçagar, who in his hermitage near at hand was plunged in mystic meditation. Thus bidden by the God he comes forth, and a vast assemblage is convened. The Çōra king, his courtiers, and the Çaiṇa saint are on the one side, while the king of Ceylon, his attendants, and the Buddhist saint are on the other. The sage on a lofty seat is enthroned as the champion of the Çaiṇa faith. Brahmā and all the gods and immortals of every rank form the audience. The Çōra king, bowing with lowly reverence, addresses the sage in the following ominous words: 'O holy one, to establish the Çaiṇa wisdom over all the world is your province: to exterminate these Buddhists is mine.' We shall not go into the details of the disputation, reserving its fuller translation for another place. (NOTE IX.) The whole turns at length upon the argument which the Çaiṇite urges with great force, that according to the Buddhist system there can be 'neither God, nor soul, nor salvation.' At the close of the discussion, the saint makes his appeal to Sarasvatī, the goddess of speech: 'How canst thou, who dwellest on the tongue of Brahmā, allow these men by use of speech to revile the Eternal?'

² See NOTE VIII. 'Bhakti.'

She acknowledges the appeal by striking the heretics dumb. The Ceylon king, convinced by the arguments, and overwhelmed by the miracle, confesses himself a convert, and prays that his dumb daughter may have the gift of speech restored to her. The prayer is heard, and she,—her tongue being loosened,—begins at once to refute the absurdities of the Buddhist gurus. The substance of her words is supposed to be given in the twelfth (or Çāraḷ) song (p. 159). Finally all the discomfited Buddhists put off the insignia of their religion, besmear themselves with the sacred ashes, and take up their abode in the precincts of sacred Tillai ; thus the Çaivite victory is complete.

No mention is made of the use of any violent measures¹.

§ viii. His Beatification. T. V. Ū. P. VII.

The last canto relates the final beatification of the saint. After his triumph over the heretics he is supposed to have sung four of his most beautiful songs, in which the note of jubilation is very perceptible [XLVI, XLIX, L, LI]. At length one day a venerable devotee, ostensibly a mendicant stranger from the Pāṇḍiyan land, presented himself before the saint with the request to be permitted to take down his songs from his own mouth. The saint accordingly sang them all, while the stranger carefully noted down every word, and having done so disappeared. It was Çivan Himself,—Çokka-Nāyagar,—who had quitted His shrine in Madura for the purpose. Straightway the God goes up to His silver mountain Kailāsam, and, assembling all the gods around him, makes all heaven glad with Māṇikka-Vāçagar's verse! Next morning, on the pedestal of the image in Tillai, is found the copy made by the God's own hand, and attested by His signature,—a thousand verses without a flaw. The devotees of the temple take up the book with astonishment and reverence, and sing over the songs to the enraptured multitudēs. They then in a body go to the sage, and ask him to give them an authoritative exposition of the meaning of the whole. In answer he bids them follow him, and proceeding to the Golden Court points to the image of the God, adding 'the Lord of the assembly Himself (Sabhāpati) is the meaning;' and then disappears, melting into the image of his Master. The devotees return to their resting-places with joy and thanksgiving².

These poems, of which the translation is here printed, are daily sung throughout the whole Tamil country with tears of rapture, and committed to memory in every Çaiva temple by the people, amongst whom it is a traditional saying, that 'he whose heart is not melted by the Tiruvāçagam must have a stone for a heart.' It is probable that a portion of the lyrics is of later date. It is scarcely possible to determine what sands of truth have been brought down in these traditions, and it is very hard indeed to say how much of their undoubted beauty and symbolic truth is due to influences (historically quite probable) from foreign sources; but it is impossible to read the poems without feeling that the sage of Tiru-Vāthavūr was a sincere seeker after God, whom, in ways that he then knew not of, he has since been permitted to know and worship.

Whom words declare not; then, BENEATH THY SACRED FEET
THEY LEARN THE MEANING OF THEIR SONG. . . . '

The success of Māṇikka-Vāçagar in reviving Çaivism, which seems to have been then almost extinct, was immediate, and we may say permanent; for, although there was a period of declension, when the Jain and Buddhist systems again became very prevalent, there arose another set of devotees¹ who must be looked upon as his disciples, though, curiously enough, scarcely any reference to him is found in their writings. From his time dates the foundation of that vast multitude of Çaiva shrines that constitute a peculiar feature of the Tamil country.

In considering the causes of his success, I feel inclined to set aside all stories of persecution carried on at his instigation. These belong, it appears to me, to a later period. His own personal devotion and fervour of spirit made him an altogether irresistible apostle of his faith. I see no evidence of anything like it in the after-times. He went about testifying that he had seen Çivan in Perun-turrai, and had then and there passed from darkness to light. He thus declared to all what he fully believed himself to have seen and handled. He was an enthusiast, but absolutely sincere. The doctrines that he taught will abundantly appear from an attentive consideration of his disputes with the Buddhist gurus. (NOTE IX.) He taught the people that there was one supreme personal God,—no mere metaphysical abstraction, but the Lord of gods and men. He also taught that it was the gracious will of Çivan to assume humanity, to come to earth as a Guru, and to make disciples of those who sought Him with adequate preparation. He announced that this way of salvation was open to all classes of the community. He also taught very emphatically the immortality of the released soul—its conscious immortality—as he said that the virtual death of the soul which Buddhism teaches is not its release. (NOTE III.) It will be seen how very near in some not unimportant respects the Çaiva system approximates to Christianity; and yet some of the corruptions to which it has led, by what almost seems a necessity, are amongst the most deplorable superstitions anywhere to be found. Here the truth of the old maxim is abundantly verified, ‘Corruptio optimi pessima.’

Again, the Çaivites led the way in the propagation of their system by means of popular songs. Any one who compares the fervid piety of our sage’s very beautiful, and generally very simple, lyrics will feel with what force they must have struck the chord that vibrated then as it vibrates still in millions of hearts. ‘One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,’ and no one can read the sage’s verses without profound emotion. Scarcely ever has the longing of the human soul for purity and peace and divine fellowship found worthier expression.

In considering the poetry of Tiru Mānikka-Vāçagar the Tamil student must feel its superiority to all the vast collections of the Dēvāram, although the authors of some of these enjoy perhaps a wider popularity among the Tamil people¹. Versions can of course give nothing but the very faintest idea of the earnestness and grace of the sage’s hymns. They cannot be rendered into simple prose without entirely misrepresenting them, and to put them rigidly into metre would involve a sacrifice of exactness in the rendering. In this translation they are given line for line, and almost word for word, in language answering, as nearly as I know how to shape it, to the tone and manner of the Tamil originals. I find this the way in which I can produce the most literal version. It is quite certain that the influence of these poems in South India is like that of the Psalms among Christians, and that they have touched for generations the hearts of the vast majority of the Tamil-speaking people. There is in them a strange combination of lofty feeling and spirituality with what we must pronounce to be the grossest idolatry. And this leads to the thought that in the Çaiva system of to-day two things that would appear to be mutually destructive are found to flourish together, and even to strengthen one another. The more philosophical and refined the Çaivite becomes, the more enthusiastic does he often appear to be in the performance of the incongruous rites of the popular worship. In general, Çaivites pay peculiar adoration to two distinct idols, leaving out of question Gaṇeṣa and Suppiramaṇya, the so-called sons of Çivan. These two symbols are first the 'liṅgam' with the 'liṅgi,' and secondly the image of Çivan accompanied with Umā, whose form is generally combined into one with his. These really represent one idea, Çivan and Çatti, the god and the energy that is inseparable from him, which combine to create, sustain, and destroy the phenomenal universe. (NOTE XIII.)

It is sometimes thought and said that the idols in these temples are mere signs, representing as symbols the Divine Being and some of His works and attributes. This is not altogether an adequate statement of the case. Each image by a peculiar service which is called Āvāganam (Sans. Āvāhanam = 'bringing unto') becomes the permanent abode of an indwelling deity, and is itself divine. The worshippers, as will be seen in our legends, seem to believe that the images of the god consume the food presented to them, and are strengthened and refreshed by it. These images are treated and spoken of as living and sentient beings. They are seen to smile, to lift up hands to bless, to move from place to place, and to issue audible commands¹. Devout and enthusiastic worshippers amid the glare of the lamps and the smoke of the incense seem to be carried away so as to entirely identify the invisible object of their thoughts with that which is presented before their eyes. It was certainly so with our poet. If it be remembered that some of these images have been actually worshipped, tended, garlanded, and treated as human beings, for a thousand years; that each generation has done them service and lavished gifts upon them; that they are connected by association with long lines of saints and sages; and that it is earnestly believed that Çivan's method of gracious manifestation is by, and through, and in these,—as what we should call sacraments of his perpetual presence,—we shall understand with what profound awe and enthusiastic affection even images, to us most unsightly, can be beheld by multitudes of good and excellent people.

And somehow the error and folly and idolatry often seem to be but the poetic accompaniments of what is mainly most worthy.

Once for all, it is necessary to state that the influence of the Bhagavad-Gītā is to be traced in every part of Mānikka-Vāçagar's poems. Çivan takes the place of Kṛishṇa, and a great deal, which I cannot help regarding as of exceeding value, is added ; while much unbefitting and obsolete (I must be pardoned for a candid expression of feeling!) Pauranic mythology and legend is dragged in, as simple poetic embellishment designed to please the multitude. I should advise every student of this Tamil work to compare it even verbally with that greatest of Sanskrit productions.

The Jain compositions were clever, pointed, elegant, full of satire and worldly wisdom, epigrammatic, but not religious ; for in the Nālaḍiyār's four hundred quatrains there is no mention of God. Even in the sublime Kurraḷ's thirteen hundred and thirty couplets there are but ten which speak of a Divine Being. The effect therefore of these songs—full of a living faith and devotion—was great and instantaneous. South India needed a personal God, an assurance of immortality, and a call to prayer. These it found in Mānikka-Vāçagar's compositions¹.

APPENDIX.

NOTE I.

ÇIVAN'S ACTS OR OPERATIONS; THE 'SACRED SPORTS' OF THE GOD.

In the Çaiṇa legends and poems three kinds of actions are very commonly referred to as having been performed by Çivan, and each of these requires consideration. Sometimes these are five. (Hymn I. 41-43; III. 13.)

1. We find Çivan perpetually spoken of as disporting Himself amidst His subjects, and His actions are often represented in a more or less grotesque aspect. This idea of the God as engaged in sport quite permeates the Çaiṇa system. You hear the minstrel in the street singing Kēlati aṇḍē, Kēlati piṇḍē — கேலதி அண்டி, கேலதி பிண்டி ('He sports in the world; He sports in the soul'), and the notion is explained by reference to His omnipotence. All His operations are easy to Him, involving no effort, so that He is said to 'act without acting'; and thus everything is the sport of Çivan: the whole universe is bright with His smile, and alive with His joyous movements. This is so thoroughly inwrought into the system that such names as 'Deceiver' (Kaḷvar, கல்வர்) and 'Maniac' are perpetually given to the God. The Purāṇam of Madura, containing the history of the sixty-four amusements of Çivan (திருவிளையாடற் புராணம்), illustrates this. Some of these quasi-divine sports seem to us very ridiculous, but we are required by our Çaiṇa friends to receive the mystic interpretation of each! In the romantic history of Māṇikka-Vācagar, which is really taken from hints in the same Purāṇam, the change of the jackals into horses, and vice versa, and the God's behaviour as a labourer, are somewhat extreme cases of this; but are not quite incapable, I suppose, of a serious application.

2. Closely connected with this are the very frequent manifestations of the God for the purpose of trying His votaries; and in several of these (not translated) the God is represented in an exceedingly unfavourable light. Throughout the whole of these legends there runs the idea that, as there were innumerable mendicants assuming the conventional garb and appearance of the God, He might at any time appear to any of His worshippers in such a form; and thus all pious souls were rendered eager to exercise due hospitality to Çaiṇa mendicants, as they knew not whether their love might not any day be rewarded by receiving the visit of the Master Himself. One of these stories is that of the 'lowly devotee' given below. Of course, the old classical stories, such as that of Baucis and Philemon, are of a similar kind.

3. The dancing of Çivan, especially in the Golden Hall at Çithambaram, is connected with an especial legend (which we give), and is always interpreted in the same way as the sports referred to above. (NOTE VII.) His dancing is symbolical of His perpetual and gracious action throughout the universe and in loving hearts. In fact, it takes us back to the manifestations of the pre-Aryan demon, or Bhairava, that dances in the burning-grounds, smearing himself with the ashes of the dead, adorning himself with necklaces of their bones, and bearing away with him a skull as a trophy. (NOTE XI.) There are many composite elements in these very ancient histories; and it is but fair to allow those who yet regard them with reverence to give them any reasonable interpretation of which they may be considered susceptible.

In the town of Tiru-çenkāṭṭan-kuḍi, in the Çōṛa land [the Tamil country round about Tanjore], there lived a man called Paraḷjotiyār, who was a skilled physician, an adept in the management of horses and elephants, and also a mighty warrior. But he was a saint too. Day and night this noble and highly gifted man meditated on the perfections of Çivan the Supreme, and so humbly devoted himself and his wealth to the service of the poor mendicant devotees of Çivan, that he always bore the name of the 'lowly devotee.'

On a certain occasion he had gained a great victory for his Rāja, and as he returned laden with rich spoil the courtiers sneeringly told the king that it was the singular devotion of the brave hero to his God that had gained for him the victory, which was therefore due solely to the favour of Çivan. 'What,' cried the Rāja, who before this knew nothing of the saintliness of his Commander-in-Chief, 'have I exposed so great a saint to peril of death in battle for my petty affairs? He shall fight no more!'

The 'lowly devotee' replied: 'Nay, I have merely performed the ancestral duties of my caste. No evil there, though I slew your foes!'

But the king, giving up to him the spoils of the campaign, released him at once from all further service, and bade him occupy himself henceforth wholly in the service of the God, and of His devotees. So the Nāyanār [devotee] went home, and thenceforth devoted himself exclusively to the worship and service of Çivan in the temple of his native town. And, as domestic virtue is the highest of all virtue (Kurraḷ, 41-50), he married a lady called Naṅgaiyār of Tiru-veṅkāḍu, by whom he had one son, Çirāḷa-dēvar. At five years of age the boy was sent to school to learn Çivan's sacred books.

Now 'Çivan the Supreme' was graciously pleased to make proof of the love of His devotee, and to test especially his obedience: and, therefore, from among the various forms the God assumes, and under which He is worshipped by the six Çaiva sects, he chose that of Bhairava—the terrible, the destroyer—and descended from Kailāsa, his own peculiar heaven, in that dread shape, loaded with matted hair, his body smeared with ashes—weird and terrible. Yet he seemed a holy man, though of the most repellent type of fanatical mendicants. The 'lowly devotee' found him thus seated under a banyan tree, and immediately discerning the sign of the sacred ashes, went to offer him hospitality.

The disguised one inquires: 'Art thou the renowned lowly devotee?'

The Nāyanār meekly replies: 'The servants of my God deign in love to style me so. I have sought in vain to-day for guests among the pilgrim-servants of our God. I have now found thee. Graciously take thy holy meal in my house.'

'Thou canst not find me the food I need.'

'If Çivan's servants need aught, the difficult becomes easy, because of Him whom they serve; I can and will provide whatever thou canst require.'

'Once in six months I eat the flesh of a slain victim: this is the day.'

'I have flocks and herds; I can supply and offer the victim, and my wife shall prepare the food.'

[To an orthodox Çaivite the slaying of any living thing is a great crime; yet this devotee is represented as overcoming his natural repugnance to it and to the use of animal food, because he believed that what the servant of Çivan wished must somehow or other, there and then, be right. The whole story—one of the very oldest of the religious legends of South India—takes us back to the time of Abraham, and seems to illustrate a faith resembling his.]

The Bhairava replies: 'What I eat must be a HUMAN victim. It must be five years of age, its limbs without a blemish; the only child in the household; a sacrifice willingly offered. Such a little one the mother must herself hold with joyous mind while the father slays. Such food alone I eat this day.'

'Such food, if THOU require, is not difficult to supply,' replies the lowly devotee, and hastens homeward with cheery countenance. His wife meets him with wifely obeisance at the door, and asks: 'What does the holy one command?'

He repeats to her the awful words.

She asks: 'Where shall such an offering be obtained?'

'My life, my wife,' says he, 'for much wealth might even such a one be bought, but where are the mother and father able with glad and pious mind so to sacrifice? It must be our own little son, and it is we who must so offer him to the servant of the God.'

She, with a like unflinching devotion, consents, and adds: 'Go; bring from the school our little one, born to be the guardian of our lives.'

The devotee, with pious mind, eagerly hastens to the school. . . . [But we must draw a veil here. The food is ready, the fearful guest brought in, and the father with courteous deference begs him to eat of the sacrifice.]

'I cannot eat alone. None so worthy to share with me as thyself.'

Another plate is set in all lowly loving obedience. But the Bhairava interposes yet another objection.

'Thou hast a son, let him eat too.'

'My son cannot help us in this!'

'Till he come I eat not; go seek, call, and bring him here.'

The father rises, calls the mother, and they, simply obedient, but bewildered, stand without the door and cry, 'Come, O son.' Then, lo, even as he was wont, his bright eyes beaming with joy, his long black silken curls glistening in the sunlight, his silver anklets tinkling as he runs, their son is seen hastening on, and rushes into his mother's arms. . . . When they would bring him in to the presence of the disguised God the dread guest had vanished, and the dish was empty, bright, and clean. It had all been delusion, the sport of the Deity!

No death, no offering,—but in pious will.

Then, because, what the God caused them to seem to do in a loving ecstasy was right in its motive, though forbidden in itself, all the gods appeared to them in the sky and applauded them; and while they worshipped in speechless rapture, the father, mother, son, and nurse were carried away to Kailāsa, there to adore the God, and Pārvathi, his wife, and Suppiramāya, his son, in bliss unending¹.

NOTE II.

THE MYSTIC FORMULA OF THE FIVE LETTERS (OR SYLLABLES); THE ÇAIVA ROSARY.

An amazing amount of ingenuity has been displayed in devising a quasi-magical system founded on these five Sanskrit syllables. The following, which is Chapter IX of Umāpathi's great work entitled 'The Fruit of Divine Grace,' gives authoritatively the whole mystery of 'The Grace of the Five Letters,' that is, the grace gained by the use of the invocation consisting of Çi-vā-ya-na-ma

¹ In the Indian Institute, Oxford, are to be seen printed copies of various editions of this work, with illustrations, curiously suggestive. In the Bodleian Library are two palm-leaf MSS. of this particular legend, one of which is a very spirited dramatic version. I have never seen or heard of another copy of this latter.

(= Adoration to Ćivan). 'A help to those votaries who cannot otherwise attain to the bliss of mystic quietude (Samādhī).' These syllables, with their various times and methods of recitation, give rise to many subtle disputations. Much is arbitrary, the method is cryptic, and very much seems puerile; but some REAL TRUTH is hidden in the symbols.

Each of these sections consists of a question, an answer by the Guru with its commentary, and a summary. The answer is the Master's teaching, and is a couplet of exquisite Tamil, in imitation of Tiruvalluvar. (See Pope's Kurraḷ, Introd., p. vii.) Under different heads we have given the whole 100 couplets of this work. (See p. xciii.)

The Disciple asks:

If the unutterable rapture has not been gained by the means already explained, is there any other method?

LXXXI.

The Guru answers:

The systems of grace, the Vēdas, and other sacred scriptures, have as object the mystic meaning of the 'Five Syllables.'

Commentary. The substance of the teaching of the sacred 'Five Letters' is the LORD, the FLOCK, and the BOND. Such is the conclusion of those mighty in the Āgamas (the twenty-eight Ćaiva Āgamas), the Vēdas, and other sacred books. (NOTE XII.)

Summary. The substance of all TRUTH is included in the 'Five Letters.'

What does this pentad of letters (syllables) declare?

LXXXII.

The King, the Energy, the Bond, fair Māyā, Soul—all these are contained in the Ōm-gāram.

Com. The Pirāṇavam (see Lex. Śrāvāṇ) contains within it, (1) the grace of Ćivan, and (2) of Ćatti (the Divine Energy, NOTE XIII), with the (3) knowledge of Āṇavam (NOTE XV), and (4) of fair Māyā, and (5) of the Soul. These are symbolized by the 'Five Syllables,' and in Ōm the whole are concentrated.

Sum. Here is expounded the doctrine of the mystic Ōm, which is the subtle form of the 'Five Letters.'

What is the order in which the 'Five Letters' stand?

LXXXIII.

On one side mystic dance of 'Weakness,' on the other dance of mystic 'Wisdom,'—SOUL between the two.

Com. The syllables MA and NA represent the energetic whirl of Impurity in itself, and as operating in the Soul; the syllables Ći and Vā represent the mystic action of Ćivan and of Grace. Between these stands YA, which represents the Soul¹.

[The 'dance' is the divine impulse and guidance given to the Soul in this state of bondage, and in the state of emancipation. NOTE I.]

Sum. In this the significance of the 'Five Letters' is explained.

How is it that by means of the 'Five Letters' the Soul does not (at once) obtain the 'KNOWN'?

LXXXIV.

MA and NA prevail over the mind; thus it returns not to Him; whenever it obtains Ći its deeds are cancelled.

Com. (This couplet admits of two distinct interpretations. The more authoritative is given.)

When MA and NA, which are 'Impurity' and 'Tirōtham' (अशुद्धि, NOTE V), bind the Soul tight (or the mind is dissipated), it (the YA) cannot return; when their great Bond is loosed, it obtains ÇI, which is supreme blessedness.

Sum. The Bond and the method of release are shown in the 'Five Letters.'

[Compare Çi. Pira. II. 41 (p. 372).]

How is it that, though there are these 'Five Letters,' Āṇavam (Impurity) does not depart?

LXXXV.

While bewildering powers of the veiler and Impurity stand first, how can it depart?

Not unless the dominant Āṇavam change its place.

Com. While NA and MA, representatives of Tirōtham and Impurity, are pronounced first, can these be removed? Put these after, and ÇI first: then Āṇavam will cease to obscure.

Sum. They who would be set free must utter the formula thus: ÇIVĀYA-NAMA, and not NAMA-ÇIVĀYA¹. [God must be first!]

[Compare Up. Vīl., 44.]

Will Impurity depart from those who repeat the 'Five Letters'?

LXXXVI.

Ah, worship; but if the foundation be not known, since ÇI precedes not, Impurity will still assert itself.

Com. When men repeat the sacred formula unmindful of the foundation, which is Çivan, desire will reassert itself, still clinging to NA and MA.

Sum. Here he commiserates those who thus recite them, and still suffer, having no Divine assistance.

Why is this pentad of letters recited thus?

LXXXVII.

If Çivan come first, and thou so recite it, embodiment will cease. This is your method.

Com. If the devotee recite the pentad so that ÇI and VĀ precede, by this position the embodiment will be removed. Thou, O disciple, who desirest release, recite it thus!

Sum. This teaches that the released say, Çi-vā-ya-na-ma, and never Na-ma-çi-vā-ya.

What benefit accrues from this order of recitation?

LXXXVIII.

VĀ will in grace give ÇI, and bring prosperity. To such souls this is the spotless Form which will appear.

Com. When thus recited, VĀ, which is grace, points out ÇI, which is Çivan, and establishes YA, which is the Soul, in the abode of delight. And that is the faultless, sacred form of Çivan.

Sum. Here the significance in the sacred formula of VĀ (= the Energy of Grace) is taught.

How will that soul exist in the heaven of liberation?

LXXXIX.

No longer placed between the spotless NA and VĀ, the Soul will stand in grace between VĀ and ÇI.

¹ Idiom permits either; but the orthodox use only the former. Such apparent trifles divide even devout people!

Com. The Soul (ya) standing no longer between the spotless (it may be read 'Ācin Na' or 'Ācil Na,' i.e. spotted or spotless; and each of these presents an orthodox view of Tirōtham) Na and Vā (Çatti), now stands between Vā and Çi. (Comp. NOTE V.)

(It is said that this arrangement must be learned from a guru.)

Sum. This defines the position attained by those who rightly use the formula.

[See Up. Vi], 46.]

Is there any manifest evidence of our being in this state of deliverance?

XC.

The sacred writings teach in every possible way to fix the mind on the path that leads not away from Him.

Com. The sacred writings teach us all methods, so that we should ponder them, and never forsake the sacred influence of Çivan and of His Çatti.

Sum. This couplet sums up the teaching of the last four chapters (VI-IX).

[On the subject of the 'Five Syllables' the remarks of Oldenberg (Buddha), p. 27, may be consulted with advantage. There has always been among men a strong conviction of the mystic power of quasi-sacred syllables, uttered in a certain way, of the inherent power of spells and charms, 'deadly to hear and deadly to tell,'—some such a feeling as Sir Walter Scott illustrates in the Lay of the Last Minstrel. In the Chhândōgya Upanishad II. 2 it is said, 'Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman as the five worlds. The hinhāra is the earth, the prastāva the fire, the udgītha the sky, the pratihāra the sun, the nidhana heaven. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman as rain. The hinhāra is "wind (that brings the rain);" the prastāva is "the cloud is come;" the udgītha is "it rains;" the pratihāra, "it flashes, it thunders;" the nidhana, "it stops." There is rain for him, and he brings rain for others, who, thus knowing, meditates on the fivefold Sāman as rain.' This may have given rise to the use of this invocation to Çivan,—Namaçivāya,—as a kind of magical formula. The intention, at any rate, is the same, to emphasize doctrines and to bring them into practical working.]

NOTE III.

THE SOUL'S EMANCIPATION (சீட. Mutti, முத்தி, मुक्ति).

In Sanskrit, Mukti or Mōksha.

The best explanation of the Çaiva Siddhānta doctrine of Mutti, or the Soul's final emancipation from embodiment (erlösung von den weltlichen banden, —Seligkeit), is found in the treatise called Çiva-Piragāçam (சிவப்பிரகாசம்) by the same great sage Umāpathi (I. 38, &c.), and has been translated (though from a very imperfect MS.) by Mr. Hoisington (American Oriental Soc. Journal, 1854). This is a commentary on the Çiva-flāna-bōdham. Mr. J. M. Nalla-sāmi, a learned Çaivite of Madras, has recently published a translation of Çiva-flāna-bōdham, with valuable notes, which is a most useful compendium.

Ten faulty (or imperfect) theories of this consummation, so devoutly wished for by all Hindus, are enumerated in these works, or in the commentaries on them:—

(1) There is the bliss aspired to by the Lokāyattar ('Worldlings'). This is simply gross sensual enjoyment in this world. These heretics are continually attacked in the Siddhānta books. [See Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha (Trübner's Series).] They were atheistic Epicureans, followers of Chārvāka (NOTE XIV).

(2) There is the cessation of the five Kandhas. This is the Buddhist Nirvāṇa, and is always considered by Tamil authors to be mere annihilation.

The South-Indian view of Buddhism is illustrated in NOTE IX. (Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha, p. 31.)

(3) The destruction of the three (or eight) qualities is pronounced to be the final emancipation by some Jains, and by the teachers of the atheistic Sāṅkhya system. This would reduce the human Soul to the condition of an unqualified mass, a mere chaos of thought and feeling.

(4) There is the cessation of deeds by mystic wisdom. This is the system of Prabhākara (Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha, p. 184). The deeds mentioned are 'all rites and services whatsoever.' The devotee becomes in this case, so the Çaivite urges, like a mere image of clay or stone.

(5) 'Mutti' is represented by some Çaiva sectaries as consisting in the removal from the Soul of all impurity, as a copper vessel is supposed to be cleansed from verdigris by the action of mercury. There is a good deal of abstruse reasoning about the pollution aforesaid. 'Copper is not really in this sense purified by the removal of the green stain on its surface; the innate weakness of the metal is in its constant liability to this defilement. Gold is never coated by such impure matter. Copper will always be so; it is, as it were, congenital. Now these sectarians preach that, by the grace of Çivan, the innate corruption of the Soul may be removed, from which will necessarily follow permanent release from all bonds.' This seems to resemble very closely the Christian idea of the sanctification of the souls of men by divine grace infused. The Siddhānta, however, insists upon it that for ever, even in the emancipated state, the power of defilement, the potentiality of corruption, remains (i.e. 'pācam is eternal'). This corruption cannot, it is true, operate any longer in the emancipated condition; but it is still there,—dead, unilluminated, the dark part of the Soul, turned away from the central light, like the unilluminated part of the moon's orb. Personal identity, and the imperfections necessarily clinging to a nature eternally finite, are not destroyed even in Mutti.

(6) Another class of Çaiva sectaries taught that in emancipation the body itself is transformed, irradiated with Çivan's light, and rendered immortal. This system supposed that intimate union with Çivan transmuted rather than sanctified the Soul.

(7) There is then the system of the Vedāntis, who taught that the absolute union of the Soul with the Infinite Wisdom, its commingling with the Divine Spirit, as the air in a jar becomes one with the circumambient air when the jar is broken, was Mutti. But here personality is lost.

(8) The doctrine of Pālkariyam (followers of Bhāskara) is, that in emancipation there is an absolute destruction of the human Soul, which is entirely absorbed in the supreme essence.

(9) There were some Çaivites who taught that in emancipation the Soul acquires mystic miraculous powers; that, in fact, the emancipated one is so made partaker of the divine nature and attributes, that he is able to gain possession of and exercise miraculous powers, which are called the eight 'Siddhis.' Persons professing to wield such magical powers are not unfrequently found in India, and there is in them very often a bewildering mixture of enthusiasm and fraud.

(10) There were also some who taught that in emancipation the Soul becomes, like a stone, insensible. This stationary, apathetic existence, if existence it can be called, is the refuge of the Soul from the sufferings and struggles of embodiment.

In opposition to all these faulty theories, the true doctrine of emancipation is thus defined: When the Soul, finally set free from the influence of threefold defilement through the grace of Ćivan, obtains divine wisdom, and so rises to live eternally in the conscious, full enjoyment of Ćivan's presence, in conclusive bliss, this is EMANCIPATION, according to the Siddhānta philosophy. (See T. A. P. 75, in NOTE VI.)

NOTE IV.

THE 'GURU.' (Sans. गुरु = venerable.)

The Guru plays a most important part in all Hindu religion. He is the 'venerable' preceptor, master, and embodied god. In the Ćaiva system His dignity culminates. He is one who in successive embodiments has drawn nearer and nearer to final deliverance (Mutti), and is now in His last stage of embodiment (NOTE V). Ćivan lives in Him, looks lovingly on the meet disciple through His eyes, blesses with His hands, with His mouth whispers into the disciple's ear the mystic words of initiation, and crowns with the lotus flowers of His feet the bowed head of the postulant, who thus is to become as his Master. (See Hymn IV. 95.)

The exact doctrine is set forth in the following ten couplets, being Chapter V in Umāpathi's authoritative work, 'The Fruit of Divine Grace' (திருவருட்பயன்).

THE FORM OF GRACE.

This chapter speaks of grace in the form of the Guru (divine Teacher), Who is mystic knowledge made manifest. This manifestation is the 'fruit of the GRACE' spoken of in the last chapter. (See NOTE VI for Chapter IV.)

CHAPTER V.

The Disciple asks:

Who comes when twofold deeds are balanced? [Ćatti-nibātham, NOTE V.]

XL I.

The Guru answers:

GRACE that in the times of ignorance abode within;
now made manifest by visible signs,—the King who departs not.

Com. While man was in this state of ignorant bondage He by latent grace abode within; now the Divine Lord, the very centre of knowledge, appears in bodily shape as a Guru. Neither from before the eyes, nor from within the Soul, does this KING henceforth depart.

Sum. Divine grace assumes the form of a GURU.

Is it essentially necessary that He Himself should come as Guru? Will not learned men suffice?

XL II.

None can know the disease within but those of the household.

Can the outer world discern it too?

Com. In any house if one be diseased, those in the house will be aware of it, but the distant world knows it not ; so, if Çivan, who dwells within the Soul, come as a Guru, our disease shall be healed.

Sum. This removes the doubt as to the necessity of Çivan's advent as a Guru.

Can all recognize the Guru thus appearing ?

XLIII.

Who born on this earth is able to discern such a Divine
Dispenser of grace not ever given before ?

Com. He performed the works of creation, preservation, destruction, and 'veiling' (NOTE XIII, Çatti) without any manifest appearance ; but now His work of grace is performed in a way not known before, while He wears a human form as a robe, and thus conceals Himself. This men know not.

Sum. Men think of the Guru, who is Çivan Himself made manifest, as though He were a mere man like themselves.

How is it that inferior souls know not the Guru ?

XLIV.

Souls immersed in the false darkness of sense-perception cannot see the two:
teachings of GRACE divine and the Teacher.

Com. Those who live in the enjoyment of fleeting, worldly enjoyments, and whose understandings are veiled by the darkness of Āyavam (NOTE XV), cannot know the two great truths of the blessedness of mystic Wisdom, and of the grace embodied in the Guru, by which it may be reached. [Comp. Bhagavad-Gītā IX. 11.]

Sum. The reason for men's ignorance of the Guru.

Is it necessary that His sacred form should be visible like ours ?

XLV.

The world does not discern the bodily form as the cloak assumed to take and hold men fast.

Com. It is common in the world to ensnare beasts and birds by exhibiting their own shape as a lure. Here men would dread any appearance manifestly Divine ; and so Grace clothes itself in a human dress, beneath which men, alas ! fail to discern the Divine.

Sum. In this and the two preceding verses, the ignorance of men in not recognizing the Guru is reproved.

May not any teacher be thus a cloaked image of Çivan ?

XLVI.

What would thus accrue ? Who knows anything ?

Seek Him, and be freed. The true meaning is known only from Him.

Com. Whether you ordinarily rely upon a particular Guru, or not, signifies nothing ; seek Him who alone can interpret the truth. So only can you escape from impurity and emerge into pure light.

Sum. The real meaning of any scientific treatise cannot be understood without the assistance of the true Teacher.

Is it not enough that divine Grace is the core of your knowledge ? Must He come as a Guru too ?

XLVII.

When snake-poison has entered the system,—not the mere presence of the 'Maṅgūṣ',—

A skilful physician is necessary to remove the poison.

Com. The mystic art of the snake-charmer is necessary to cure one bitten by a poisonous serpent. Thus a Guru bearing Çivan's very image must look upon us with the eye of mystic Wisdom, and darkness will disappear, not otherwise.

Sum. The Bond is only loosed by the divine Teacher.

Is this His gracious manifestation as a Teacher for all, or for one class only?

XLVIII.

To those become a-kaḷar He gives precious gifts of grace, and cancels deeds.

To those still ça-kaḷar, as a Guru, He gives His grace.

Com. To the Viññāna-kaḷar and to the *Prañaiyā-kaḷar*¹, who are freed from Kalai (sense-deception), He reveals Himself in their inner consciousness, and removes *Aṇavam*². To others, in the form of a Guru, He comes and bestows grace. [Comp. p. Bxx.]

Sum. This shows why, and for the sake of whom, He puts on the vestment of humanity.

Cannot salvation be effected without the coming of the Guru?

XLIX.

Who can know unless the gracious Revealer of the wide extended way, the great Knower, shall appear?

Com. Unless the Lord, possessed of the wisdom surpassing the six *ATTUVĀ*³, and the Revealer of the way of release, shall come in the form of a Guru, who can know these things?

Sum. The knowledge of the really existent can only be given by the manifested Lord, possessed of perfect knowledge.

Is it necessary that He should come in the form of another devotee? Is it not enough that He is within my sentient mind?

L.

Mystic knowledge may visit us without His intervention—when the fair crystal kindles fire without the sun!

Com. The crystal may be faultless, but will not act as a burning glass in the absence of the sun; even so divine and mystic Wisdom enters not the mind, whatever knowledge it may possess, without the Guru, who is Çivan's grace made manifest.

Sum. In this it is taught that religious knowledge has no excellence without the teaching of the Guru.

NOTE V.

ÇATTI-NIBĀTHAM : சத்தி-நிபாத்தம், शक्ति निपात = 'Cessation of Energy.'

The souls of men are found here in a state of bondage called the 'combined state' (பந்தம்). The Çaiva Siddhānta system traces their passage thence into the 'free, eternally emancipated state' (முத்தி). The eternal Soul was, by a gracious interposition of the Supreme, made subject to vanity, combined with material forms, and launched forth into a world of action, in order that, the effect of deeds (eternal, à parte ante) being removed or cancelled, the Soul might at length be enlightened by special grace, and so become gradually disentangled and purified; the consummation of which is Mukti (NOTE III), or final emancipation, and mystic, ineffable, eternal union with Çivan⁴.

² NOTE XV.

³ This word is an adaptation of Sans. ADHVĀ, and expresses the physiological elements of all being. The idea is obsolete.

⁴ See Pope's Naladiyār, ch. xi. pp. 66-69.

In this second stage of embodiment, the passage into which is the great crisis in the Soul's secular pilgrimage, it is prepared for the third and final stage. The man is now no longer of the world, but a devotee (Jīvan-muttan, சீவன்முத்தன்), emancipate, yet in the flesh: one in whom a great work of grace is being wrought, and is near to its consummation. Comp. Theologia Germanica¹, ch. xxviii. This work, dated about 1350, by an unknown Christian saint, who was thus a contemporary of Umā-pathi (NOTE VII, and p. xciii), should be studied by all earnest 'seekers after truth'!

In Bhagavad-Gītā, ch. ii, this state of Jīvan-mutti is described. It is called Çān̥thi (சாந்தி, शांति), 'repose.' The next and final stage is Nirvāṇam (निर्वाणं, நிர்வாணம் = 'blowing out'), which is used for Mutti.

In the Sāṅkhya Kārikā (LXVII) this doctrine of Jīvan-mutti (or Çān̥thi) is enunciated: 'By attainment of perfect knowledge the causes of deeds, virtuous and otherwise, cease (வினை அறுப்பு). Yet for awhile the body lasts on, as a potter's wheel continues for a time to revolve after the impulse has ceased: saṅskāra vacāt chakrabhramavat dhṛita parirah.'

In the Sāṅkhya aphorisms of Kapila, Book III. 78-83, the subject is discussed: 'The emancipated sage goes on living, as the potter's wheel revolves for some time, in consequence of the motive inertia resulting from previous action. This is necessary; for such a living, yet liberated, sage is the only competent teacher—the only Guru.'

The steps by which the devotee has reached this threshold of a new existence are²—

(1) His being awakened by the energy (Çatti) of Çivan, which is, in intention and in fact, entirely gracious; but as it arouses the Soul to painful conflicts in varied experiences of successive embodiments, it is spoken of as an energy of (divine) anger (Tirōṭham).

(2) The second step was his coming under the power of Māyā, both pure and impure (matter or its underlying essence, and sense organization), whereby he has obtained successive bodies, spheres of being, organs, and experiences. In these embodiments he has consumed the fruit of his works,—those which are actually his, and those which have been imputed to him and laid upon him by the Supreme Power (by an eternal fate).

(3) The third step is, that the impurities in which from all eternity the Soul has been involved have thus 'ripened,' or their fruits have become mature (மல-பரிபாகம்). This is an idea profound and far-reaching, but which it is difficult for us to comprehend. It rests upon a figure. The Soul has to partake of the results of these deeds which are its eternally destined inheritance. This is compared to the eating of fruit; but these fruits can only be eaten when they are ripe, when the Soul has been placed in circumstances where their whole effect and deserts have been brought out and experienced. The whole effect of any deed is slowly evolved and matured, and the Soul must encounter, from aeon to aeon, these mysterious powers which constitute its destiny, in all their developements and in their fullest maturity.

(4) In the fulness of the time, as the fourth step, there comes a 'balancing of deeds.' (T.A.P. 51.) The notion of this seems to be, that there is a point in time when the sins and merits that cling to the Soul and are its fate, become equal, and balance one another, or are made equal by the grace of the Supreme. There are now gathered into one the three kinds of deeds, the eternal accumulations of fate, the assignment for expiation during the present birth, and those which will yet accrue before the consummation is gained. These threefold deeds are at once cancelled; and, freed from them, the Soul enters upon its last stage of embodied existence. (See Pope's Nāḍiṭṭar, ch. xi. pp. 66-69, KARMMA.)

(5) The energy of Çatti, which is commonly called 'the veiling' energy (Tirōtham), is now changed into a gracious energy of enlightenment and repose from physical perturbations; this is called Çiva-çatti-nibātham, or cessation of Çivan's 'veiling' energy. (NOTE XIII on Çatti.)

(6) And thus the Soul passes into another human form, of the purest and most orthodox Çaiṇa lineage, and is in the third and pure state. Its course and discipline therein must be considered in another place.

NOTE VI.

GRACE.

The prominence given in the Çaiṇa Siddhānta to the operations of Divine Grace is remarkable. The Tamil word (அருள்) Aruḷ is used in every sense given to Χάρις in the New Testament, and to חֶסֶד in the Hebrew. As Māṇikka-Vāçagar uses the word constantly, I have translated Umāpathi's Chapter IV, and append it.

✠ The remedy for Āṇavam is Aruḷ: இருளுக்கு மாறு அருளே! (NOTE XV.)

The Fruit of Divine Grace.

CHAPTER IV.

THE NATURE OF GRACE.

This treats of divine and mystic WISDOM imparted in the shape of GRACE. In order to dissipate the darkness of Āṇavam, and to show the way of deliverance, the doctrine of grace, the remedy for Āṇavam, is here expounded.

The Disciple asks:

What is meant by the 'dawning of the day'¹?

XXXI.

The Guru answers:

Than GRACE is nothing greater; as in this world nothing is greater than that one's soul requires.

Com. There is nothing greater than Divine GRACE. This may be illustrated by the fact that in the world the things each one needs and desires are to him the greatest.

Sum. Here the dignity of GRACE is shown.

Explain how Grace operates.

XXXII.

Grace as the sun appears, and sheds everywhere great light for deeds and their effects.

Com. There are 'deeds (KARMA) of accumulation' (Çaṣṣitam); there are also 'deeds ripe for fruition in the present birth' (Pirāratam); there are also 'deeds now accumulating within man's consciousness' (Āgamiyam). Grace sheds everywhere light for the performance of new deeds, and for the consumption of the fruits of former deeds; even as the sun by shedding light enables men to accumulate and to enjoy.

Sum. Here it is stated that GRACE is the source of all action.

There is an ambiguity in the couplet. It seems to read: 'increase and consumption of deeds'; i.e. 'Çivan's Grace, through the operation of His Çatī, affords light of understanding by which men (otherwise utterly unintelligent) perform the actions of life, thus at once accumulating new stores of deeds (meritorious or sinful), and experiencing (eating, consuming) the fruit of deeds done in former organizations.'

The whole doctrine is epitomised in Pope's Nalaqiyār, pp. 66-69.

If one should say, 'No need for Grace to effect these results; the soul of man can do its own work,' what is your reply?

XXXIII.

The flesh knows nothing, and the soul knows nothing of itself:
since these know nothing; who, of himself, can know?

Com. The material elements of the phenomenal universe are unintelligent¹; souls have no knowledge of their own; therefore, if Grace do not take cognizance of their state, and impart to them mystic knowledge, whence can they in this world obtain saving knowledge?

Sum. In this is given the answer to those who say that Grace needs not to know, or take cognizance of, the Soul: It needs to know that it may make known!

How is it that souls are in ignorance of the Grace which thus guides them?

XXXIV.

As fish in the sea of milk conduct themselves, though with Grace endowed, souls sink back in the sea of bewilderment.

Com. As fish in the 'sea of milk' not drinking of it, seek lesser fish for food, so souls, even in the sea of Grace, through bewilderment know not Çivan's Grace! They seek the mean enjoyments of earth, while spiritual delights and divine communion are disregarded.

Sum. Here the degradation and suffering of souls even amid Çivan's Grace is shown.

How is it that souls know not His gift of knowledge?

XXXV.

A traveller oft knows not the helper drawing nigh.

The five senses know not the soul to which they are instruments of perception.

So the soul knows not its Lord.

Com. Like one who walking by the way is not aware of a helper that has drawn nigh; the soul is not known by the five senses it employs. Even so souls know not the Grace Which is their life and illuminator.

Sum. Here also the ignorance of souls in regard to the help and direction of Grace is shown.

What illustrates the soul's ignorance of the way it is guided ?

XXXVI.

Men know not that earth upholds them as they tread ;
so embodied souls know not Grace that inspires.

Com. Men who walk on the earth say of themselves, 'we walk,' and think not that it is the earth which upholds them ; so, in this world, though embodied souls are under the influence of Divine Grace, they reflect not that it is Grace that works all in them.

Sum. The insensibility of souls.

Can they by seeking discover Grace ?

XXXVII.

Those who have lost the mountain, lost the earth, lost the sky, and lost themselves are alike !

Com. Such is the state of men,—who on the mountain, behold it not ; on the earth, see it not ; in the sky, know it not ; possessed of Divine guiding wisdom, discern it not ; and, finally, are ignorant of their own being !

Sum. The bewilderment attendant upon embodiment.

How is it that men wander ignorant of Grace ?

XXXVIII.

The way of men under the tyranny of falsehood is like that of him who stands in the flood with parched tongue ; or like his who after the dawning is in darkness still.

Com. It is possible to stand in the midst of a stream of sweetest water without tasting it, and so to remain parched with thirst. It is also sometimes the case that fools are bewildered as in the dark, even when day has dawned. So, those that are under the power of deceit taste not the Grace, and see not the light of the Lord.

Sum. The fault is in the soul, and not in Him !

How can this ignorance be removed ?

XXXIX.

Hear with undistracted mind ! This folly is that of the cat standing on the milk-pan, and springing at the insect on the wall.

Com. We should calmly and collectedly listen to the teachings of Grace. The folly that listens with divided mind is like that of the cat, which having reached the milk vessel, and standing on its edge, drinks not the sweet milk, but darts at the wall in pursuit of a worthless spider at the risk of its life, breaking the vessel in the spring¹.

Sum. This and the four preceding couplets illustrate the assistance, governance, and support of GRACE which souls are ignorant of, and so incur loss. The common title of these five couplets is 'Soul's Fault.'

Is this not known to the unthinking also ?

XL.

How can 'deliverance' be attained by empty souls that have no real sympathy with Grace, though theirs from eternity ?

Com. From everlasting ages until this day have they been recipients of Grace, but not in the least have they come under its influence, and are thus souls devoid of good ; how can such obtain DELIVERANCE !

Sum. This couplet reproves those who, though recipients of Çivan's Grace, yield not to its influence, and seek not final 'deliverance.' [Comp. Gītā II. 52-64.]

In continuation of NOTE VI we add Tiru-arul-payan, Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and X, completing the system as sung in the Tiruvāçagam. This was the saint's supposed experience. The whole will repay much study¹.

CHAPTER VI.

THE FIRST STEP—THE WAY OF KNOWLEDGE: ĀNMA-TARIÇANAM, 'SOUL'S ENLIGHTENMENT.'

This teaches the way in which we come to understand the REALITY of things, that is PATHI. Since this is by grace, it naturally follows the chapter that treats of that subject. (NOTES IV and XII.) Nalla-sāmi Piḷḷai's note on this chapter is exhaustive.

The Disciple asks:

When will He come as a Guru ?

LI.

The Guru answers:

When the vast mass of twofold deeds is balanced, the 'Energy' of the King shall exert its power.

Com. When the time arrives in which opposing sins and merits exactly counterbalance one another, Çivan's gracious emancipating Energy shall begin Her work. (NOTE V, p. xlviii.)

Sum. Here we are taught that for the understanding of the Reality the Divine Energy is imparted as needed.

When the Lord appears as a Guru what will He teach ?

LII.

The One, the manifold, darkness, deeds, twofold Māyai :
these He will show us as entities from everlasting.

Com. There are six entities which have no beginning. The first of these is the LORD (Pathi), Who is One. The second is the aggregate of SOULS (Paçu) : an infinite host. The third is the Impurity of ĀṆAVAM, wearing the form of darkness. The fourth is twofold DEEDS (Vinai). The fifth and sixth are the two kinds of MĀYAI, the pure and the impure (the unreal, changeable substratum of the phenomenal universe). [Gītā XIII. 19.]

Sum. This teaches us of the realities which have no beginning. (These are six.)

[Here is a grand divergence from much Western theology and philosophy: (1) The aggregate of all 'souls' with their undeveloped potentialities of thought and act, interpenetrated by a divine but hidden influence, is without beginning, and thus Çivan is not their Creator,—is not 'the Father of all Spirits.' (2) A corruption called Āṇavam (as essential to the Āṇu, or Soul) is also uncreate,—from everlasting. (3) A shadowy, inconceivable host of unoriginated deeds, merits, and demerits from all eternity waits to require consumption by these souls. (4) The Māyā, the substratum and material (?) of the phenomenal universe, is also from everlasting.]

Of these six entities which have no beginning, which must you know ?

LIII.

DOER; DEEDS done; FRUITS; LORD, who brings deeds home to soul :
these belong to thee to know, O disciple !

Com. In order to be saved it is necessary to consider (1) the spiritual essence to which deeds are attributed ; (2) the twofold deeds which are supposed to have been done ; (3) the joys and sorrows of embodiment which are their fruit ; and (4) the Lord, who at the appointed time brings these deeds home to the soul, that it may experience their effects.

Sum. This and the two following show how the world is guided.

N.B. It is ignorance of these four things that leads to the self-assertion which says, 'I' and 'mine.'

Can the living one Himself know these ?

LIV.

Flesh lives through its connection with the living soul. Understanding souls live through union of the embodied soul with Divine Grace.

Com. The body is in life inseparably conjoined with the spirit, and living and moving as one with it. So this embodied soul is united inseparably with the Divine Wisdom, and thus lives and moves.

Sum. This also teaches Çivan's method of guiding men.

How does Grace operate upon souls ?

LV.

Crystal retains its own clear brightness. The sun shining on it shows also many varied hues.

Thus earth bears the colours of its King !

Com. The crystal under the sun's light reflects many colours while retaining its own transparent brilliancy (which also it owes to the same sun) ; so the Energy of Wisdom, the light of the Supreme, irradiates the soul, and permeates the world. [Comp. LXVII, p. lv.]

Sum. This and the two preceding couplets show how the Lord acts upon the world.

[In 'bondage,' and in 'release' alike, the Lord is the cause of all.]

May I not say, 'I need not Grace to see by ; I myself will see ?'

LVI.

Easy the way of vision ; but twixt eye and object light must be.

Without the light of Grace twixt soul and KNOWN, soul sees not !

Com. In the midst of the soul's thought the light of mystic wisdom must be set up and shine ; without this, if you regard the senses merely, you will obtain no real knowledge. The soul is unintelligent without Çivan.

Sum. This teaches us that words heard impart no understanding without the GURU.

How is it we see by the Grace of Çivan ?

LVII.

In your feeble perception by the senses, the soul's instruments, learn how the soul itself is the instrument of Grace.

Com. Know thou that all thine actions are performed under the guidance of the active Energy of the Supreme, even as the soul perceives through the senses as its instruments.

Sum. We live and act under the guidance of the Lord.

How are we to know under the influence of Grace ?

LVIII.

Ponder not ! Think of nothing ! See not thyself in the foreground !
What thou beholdest, let it be THAT.

Com. Inquire not of things in their abstractness, of what nature mystic wisdom may be. Think not of anything in its concreteness, nor seek to interpret the symbols as thou dost of material objects. Put not thyself forward as one who sees. Regard steadily the Loving Wisdom that regards thee.

Sum. Remaining thus moveless, the vast expanse of mystic knowledge shall be thine.

Shall I obtain joy by thus contemplating the Divine Grace ?

LIX.

Regard that joy itself as the one object of contemplation ;
and hide thou thyself in the mystic light of wisdom.

Com. Regard the gladness of mystic knowledge as though it were an object of sense (an objective reality) ; but, that there may be for thee no other light than that of mystic knowledge, enter thou within It, and lie hidden there !

Sum. This teaches the absolute mingling of the soul with Grace.

And when shall we part with these intuitions of sense ?

LX.

See, as thou hast seen ! The unseen seek not to see !
As thou hast been taken, rest !

Com. In whatever way Grace hath appeared to thee, even so regard thou It. What thou canst not see, strive not to see. In whatever way Grace absorbs thee, wholly yield thyself.

Sum. In this and the two preceding verses we are taught how to behold, how to become commingled with, and how absolutely to yield oneself up to Divine Grace. [Gītā XVIII.]

CHAPTER VII.

THE SECOND STEP—THE 'SOUL'S CLEANSING : ' ĀNMA-ÇUDDHI.

The last chapter spoke of the SOUL'S KNOWLEDGE, and in this we are taught how to apply knowledge for the SOUL'S CLEANSING from SELF.

[After illumination comes purification.]

The Disciple asks :

When comes perfect resignation of the soul ?

LXI.

The Guru answers :

Those in pure shade need not bid one in noontide glare come hide himself :
the fainting soul will resort to the shadow of Grace of its own accord.

Com. No one need say to him who is fainting in the oppressive glare, ' Haste hither to hide thee in the refreshing shade ; ' of his own accord he hastens towards it. Even thus, those suffering from the heat of earth's delusions will seek the relief of Grace. [Hymn V. (iv), pp. 58-61.]

Sum. The reason for resorting to Grace.

[This is in substance Çi. Pira. II. 26-29; and Çi. Nā. B. Çūtram IX :
'Let me hide myself in THEE!']

How is it this sacred Grace is not enjoyed by all alike?

LXII.

To jaundiced taste even sweet milk is bitter ;
when tongue is cleansed the bitterness is gone.

Com. When the sense of taste is vitiated by disease, even sweet milk seems bitter. Cure the disease, and the bitterness disappears. Thus under the influence of ĀṆAVAM all religious observances are distasteful; when ĀṆAVAM departs, the Gurn, the Liṅgam¹, and the Saṅga-mam will be desired.

Sum. This shows that when Grace reveals itself, the healed soul at once recognizes it.

When ignorance departs, is it I that knows?

LXIII.

Though light amid the darkness is to the see-er shown, he still regards a vain phantasm. When will this cease?

Com. Though Grace in form of light, reveals Itself to souls lying bewildered in the darkness of Ānavam, to the intent that they may see the LORD, they see Him not, but contemplate THEMSELVES! When shall such vain imaginings cease?

Sum. The fault of not steadily beholding Grace alone.

What are the respective actions of the enlightened and the unenlightened?

LXIV.

Both light and darkness make all things seem alike :
to distinguish between unity and multiplicity is the work of the enlightened.

Com. In perfect light and in dense darkness the distinctions of things are equally lost. The distinguishing them and the confounding them are the signs of the intelligent and unintelligent respectively.

Sum. Those under the influence of Grace, and those who are not, are alike in this; nothing else appears to them: all light, or all darkness.

Do all understand the way of clear knowledge and mystic union?

LXV.

Save in the case of the good and loving ones doth it ever happen that one is found to bear the whole burden you would impose?

Com. None but good friends bear the burden wholly which is imposed upon them in aiding others. Can such friendship be easily attained?

Sum. We are told that the deeds of those loving souls that approach Him are His. Such a loving one is the KNOWER, and His Grace is easy of attainment.

[A quotation is given which seems to give an Antinomian turn to this couplet. Does the mystic renouncer of selfhood cease to be morally responsible?

இவனும் இவன்செய்தி எல்லாம் என்செய்தி என்றும், செய்ததெனக் கிவனாகும் செய்த தென்றும், பலம் அகவகடனாகி நின்ற கொட்கவர்; பரிவீ பாததாதத செய்திநனும் பணிபாக்கி விடுமே!

'Çivan abides with me, destroys "birth," saying, "This man's deeds are wholly Mine; what is done to him is done to Me! If the faithful commit sin He makes it service."']

Is He who imposes the burden diverse from him who bears the burden? Is not all Piramam?

LXVI.

One placed a treasure in your charge; deceitfully some one with guile appropriated it.

Say, were you asleep, or had you gone elsewhere?

Com. Çivan gave thee body, organs, a world to energize in, and faculties for enjoyment—in trust. He comes to claim them. You say, 'Some one came with guile and filched them from me.' Were you asleep or absent when the robbery was effected? You have lost yourself and the KNOWN.

Sum. The denial of the reality of Paçu and Pāçam is treachery to Çatti.

To the wise, who have thus become 'Servants,' do not 'impurities' arise?

LXVII.

As the crystal pillar receives the sun's light, with no shadow at all;
so no darkness remains to lay hold on him.

Com. At noon, when the sun is in the zenith, its perpendicular rays fall on and are absorbed in the crystal column, without shadow or refracted rays of many hues; so under the full influence of Grace the darkness of impurity abides not. [Comp. T. A. P. 50, 55, pp. xlv, lii.]

Sum. Here we are taught how Grace binds the soul under its absolute influence.

[This beautiful couplet requires much study in connection with the whole system. The soul, the crystal column, has potentialities of splendour; but only 'in the Divine Light does it see light.' It must stand upright under the direct rays of the Divine Sun, with no intervening mist or cloud, and no reflected, coloured, refracted cross-lights from the sense-world. Then only is it filled with pure essential radiance, in which its own crystalline lustre shines in its perfection, yet is undistinguished, being merged in the glory that excelleth, the Infinite All-in-All.]

How may one abide so that 'Impurity' shall not appear, but Grace remain?

LXVIII.

Those under the influence of Grace stand BEHIND the light of reality, like jewelled hand that bears a gleaming torch.

Com. Those that bear aloft before them a blazing torch can see whatever they desire: torch BEFORE, themselves BEHIND it. Thus till the Known shall appear, men must put the torch of Grace before them, and tread carefully behind it.

Sum. The method of remaining in union with Grace.

It is Grace that knows. I need not know?

LXIX.

If it be not anything one can perceive by the Five Senses, deprived of THIS what can the Five Senses perceive? what can self perceive?

Com. If it be not an object which can be discerned by the body, as is the case with the Bliss supreme, which is the KNOWN, how can the Senses assist us in gaining it? or how can souls attain it?

Sum. Since it is out of the sphere of sensation, how can it be within the power of the Senses to gain it? [Things spiritual can only be spiritually discerned.]

Is it necessary for Grace to show itself? Can I not myself see it?

LXX.

Those that freely give must not be thought of as those forced by us to give.
Think rather: 'Who are we to obtain this boon?'

Com. One does not think of those who spontaneously and with desire bestow anything upon us as though they had yielded to our violence. And thus it is through Grace only that the KNOWN is revealed to the apprehension of the soul.

Sum. This and the preceding couplet teach that supreme felicity is the gift of Grace; and that souls, whether with organs or without them, cannot of themselves obtain it.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE THIRD STEP—THE STATE OF BLISS: ĀNMA-LĀBHAM. [Comp. NOTE V.]

This signifies the way in which the soul's 'gain' is obtained. 'Soul-purity' has for its fruit 'Soul-gain,' which is union with God. Thus the chapters are connected. [Man dies to live.]

The Disciple asks:

In what way can the soul obtain bliss?

LXXI.

The Gurn answers:

Those that put BEFORE them the light that arises in the darkness enjoy bliss;
those that put it BEHIND them endure suffering.

Com. Those that once (in a lower stage) put divine and mystic knowledge BEHIND them, and went before it, have suffered affliction. Afterwards, if they place the lamp of mystic wisdom, which has arisen amidst the darkness of natural impurity, BEFORE them, and walk in its light, these shall obtain supreme felicity.

Sum. Here we are taught who they are that shall obtain supreme felicity.

[This is § 7 of Book II in Çi. Pira., verses 30-39.]

For this, is not Grace sufficient? Over and above this, what need of the 'KNOWN'?

LXXII.

Nothing results when souls and Grace are without the KNOWN, when the soul and the KNOWN combine is bliss.

Com. The KNOWN is supreme, and it is through HIM that the soul derives blessing. (This seems to need no further explanation; but the idea of a mystic marriage is introduced in a fantastic and untranslatable fashion. See p. lxxxi. The soul is feminine, so is Çatti, or Grace. The soul must be introduced by Grace to Çivan, the KNOWN, the mystic Bridegroom.)

Sum. We learn here the limits within which supreme felicity can be attained.

[This is Çi. Pira. II. 24.]

When the soul is united to the KNOWN, does the KNOWN through the soul obtain bliss?

LXXIII.

He gives bliss to those that draw nigh to Him.

His Form is perfect blessedness; nor can this be enhanced.

Com. The Lord imparts supreme felicity to those who draw near to Him; but since His Form is the fulness of infinite felicity, He partakes not of the blessedness He imparts.

Sum. The King IMPARTS, and does not RECEIVE.

Does the soul, then, obtain that bliss as one alien from the Supreme?

LXXIV.

As in the compound Tāḍalai, by combination of letters $\text{L} + \text{T} = \text{D}$, and these do not remain but coalesce;

so, know thou, that in the supreme felicity thou shalt be one with the Lord.

Com. When the words Tāḷ ('foot') and Talai ('head') are written as one compound ('head and foot'), the letters l and t combine, and are not separated, but coalesce in ḍ (G. 37); so the soul shall enjoy blessedness in mystic union with the King.

[Foot is soul, and Head is Çivan.]

Sum. The soul sinks down into the KNOWN in mystic eternal union.

[See Çi. Pira. II. 37.]

Do they not yet obtain absolute unity?

LXXV.

If they become one, both disappear; if they remain two, there is no fruition; therefore there is union and non-union.

Com. If you say that the Lord and the soul are one, there is neither an obtainer nor boon obtained. If, on the other hand, they are two, there is no blissful consummation for the soul; therefore the condition of such souls must be a compound of duality and non-duality: mingled, not merged.

Sum. In release the soul is not merged in the Supreme. (NOTE III.)¹

What then is the mode of the soul's approach to the Supreme and unity with Him?

LXXVI.

None say we have drawn nigh; and none say we have obtained; in speechless rapture when bonds are loosed, embodiment returns no more.

Com. Those who obtain the Supreme felicity of release, and those who have attained the state of Samāthi which directly leads to it, never for a moment leave their Lord, by self-contemplation. Those who, beyond the power of speech, have laid hold of Him are born no more.

Sum. Here the state of those who have obtained release is explained.

[Comp. Çi. Pira. II. 34, 43; Çi. Nā. B. Vep. 62.]

What is meant by the speechlessness above?

LXXVII.

Till you are in a state like that of one possessed, remain destitute of all action.

Com. One possessed by a spirit is under that spirit's absolute control, and is incapable of any independent action; so remain thou inactive, till all thine acts are under the control of the King.

Sum. Here we are told what mature Samāthi is.

What is the cessation of action on the part of the absorbed mystic like?

LXXVIII.

To those who obtain that resplendent possession that gain alone suffices;
all else is as something in the hands of those that sleep.

¹ Comp. Kingsley's preface to Theologia Germanica, referred to in NOTE V. See Inge's Hampton Lectures, 1899, pp. 189-191.

Com. When the devotees have gained the glorious and true possession of the Lord, therein is supreme delight ; and any works, such as the observances of Yōgam and the like, are as things handled by one in sleep.

Sum. Specific sectarial observances cease, or are performed mechanically.

[Comp. Çl. Pira., p. 385 ; II. 45, 46.]

Can the rapture of this union be described ?

LXXIX.

Absorbed in the delight of the state when the three appear not, what words can tell the bliss ?

Com. When the knower, the mystic knowledge, and the KNOWN appear no more as distinct, being mingled in one happy fruition, that absorption is a rapture inexpressible by words.

Sum. The overwhelming nature of the Supreme felicity. [Gitā X. 9.]

In what way can that possession be obtained ?

LXXX.

The bliss that is named as above all bliss is the bliss which the abiding in divine love bestows.

Com. This supreme felicity is praised as surpassing all delights. The enjoyment of it even now is the result of abiding in the state of reverent loving service.

Sum. LOVE makes the attainment of supreme felicity easy.

CHAPTER X.

THE FOURTH STEP—THE STATE OF THOSE WHO HAVE ‘DRAWN NIGH.’

Here the condition of those who have attained to Samāthi (Mystic Slumber) is spoken of. What this slumber is has been shown in the preceding chapter, and how men may gain it : here the condition of the already liberated mystic is explained. These are the devotees whose condition is described in NOTE V.

The Disciple asks :

What is the thought of the KNOWERS¹ who never forsake the KNOWN ?

XCI.

The Guru answers :

Sinking in the Supreme Understanding, while delight sinks into their souls, they slumber in sacred peace. What other words are there ?

Com. While they themselves sink down into the full tide of Mystic Wisdom (which is the Supreme); and while infinite rapture flows down into their souls, they abide in a state of blissful slumber.

Sum. It is taught here that the Knower sinks down into and abides in the Known.

Will those who have attained this state desire higher stations of felicity ?

XCII.

Assuredly they perform not the ‘five great works’; nor the ‘causal works’; nor the employments of any abodes of pleasure.

¹ ‘The KNOWLEDGE, the KNOWERS, and the KNOWN :’ NĀNAM, NĀTRU, and NĒYAM.

Com. The works of Çivan (NOTE I), the Supreme, are creation (1), conservation (2), destruction (3), 'veiling' (4), and bestowal of grace (5). They perform not these. The ministerial works of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Ruttiran, Magēcan, Sathāçivan (Çi. Pira. I. 9) they do not; nor do they engage in any of those dreaded acts which lead to future embodiment.

Sum. This teaches that they rest from all work.

Do these attain to omniscience and the other attributes?

XCIII.

Though they have attained to the knowledge of everything;
these 'Knowers' here know nothing but the 'Known.'

Com. Though these perfected devotees by mystic union with Çivan gain omniscience and other qualities; yet, while on this earth, they know nothing whatsoever except the Supreme, the one object of mystic knowledge.

Sum. In every place they see Çivan, and contemplate Him alone.

When objects of sense present themselves to the Knowers of this kind, how do they act?

XCIV.

They restrain the organs of sense; and entering, sink into their Source.
They follow not the senses, but act as the tortoise does on land.

Com. When the world of sense obtrudes itself, the devout man fears, goes not out after it, checks the perceptions of his mind, draws near and enters into the KNOWN, and from THAT turns not away. An illustration of this is the tortoise, which, walking on the earth, if any one approach it, fears, draws in its head, and lies motionless.

Sum. This shows the way in which the devout dread the power of sense, and withdraw themselves from its influence.

[Comp. Çi. Pira., p. 382.]

But are there any who have left the 'Known' and departed from him?

XCV.

There is no place or world where the Lord is not.

There is no place to which men can withdraw from Him.

Com. There is no place in which the soul can dwell apart from Çivan. Çivan Himself throughout all rational and irrational beings abides, so that nothing and no one is apart from Him.

Sum. This teaches that the devout have ceased to dwell in the sphere of limited knowledge, and have entered the unlimited.

Have these persons then seen that Existence within (themselves) or without?

XCVI.

Within and without the same Divine Grace stands revealed.

Those who possess this mystic vision despise nothing.

[Commentators differ, and the text is ambiguous. We give the later.]

Com. Both within and without, That which Mystic Wisdom reveals exists unvarying; to those who have obtained it no means of communion with Him, even through the senses, must be despised.

Sum. This shows us that to the mystically enlightened the phenomenal universe is only seen in God.

[Comp. Çi. Pira., p. 369. 'To those who have attained to Nānam (Mystic Wisdom) Çivan is revealed within, and is seen equally in forms, such as the Liṅgam, &c., in which He reveals Himself. The perfected mystic despises not any means of realizing the presence of the Immanent Infinite.' This is Çarīthai (traditional observance) in Nānam.]

But, tell me, do these 'mystic knowers' engage in no employment?

XCVII.

To those who engage in the world's work comes worldly requital.

To the absence of such work the result is the True.

Com. To those who follow as they are led, and under the egotistic influences which say 'I' and 'mine,' perform acts, there accrues the reward of worldly enjoyment. To those who perform penances and give gifts (with no egotistic desires) the result is the imperishable pleasures of the world of deliverance.

Sum. To those who abide in This, the Truth, no work (apart from Him) is possible.

As old deeds¹ are consumed (eaten), does not the effect of new deeds accumulate?

XCVIII.

Old deeds disappear with the body; if in the interval deeds accumulate, Divine Grace burns them up.

Com. Here the division of deeds into the three classes of Pirāraṭṭam, Çaṇṇitam, and Āgamiyam must be remembered. The two former of these disappear with the death of the body (of the saint). As for those deeds of merit or demerit which have accumulated in this present state, the Divine Grace dissipates them (p. xliz).

Sum. From this it appears that the consummate devotee is freed from the influence of every species of deed.

Is the infinite liberation obtained when the body dies?

XCIX.

To men of matured knowledge the works that yield the three return not;
to them this world is absolutely as that world.

Com. The threefold deeds which compel a man to live in the present embodiment, or in the next embodiment, or in any future state, are removed by Grace; and thus he enjoys, even while still in the body, the infinite deliverance.

Sum. This teaches that in the condition of the Jīvan-mukta he enjoys on earth the bliss of the infinite liberation.

[Comp. Kurraḷ, p. 353; Nāḷaḍiyār, p. 157.]

Have these no desire to save others?

C.

Reflecting upon the sorrows of those under the influence of deceit, they are agitated by a flood of compassion.

Com. When these devout and blessed persons behold the multitude of souls that, under the influence of the deceits of the sense-world, are suffering affliction, they themselves are agitated by a feeling of irrepressible compassion.

Sum. In the souls that desire the heavenly emancipation there is a loving Grace like that of their King.

NOTE VII.

ÇITHAMBARAM: ITS LEGENDS, AND THE MYSTIC DANCE OF ÇIVAN.

THE 'TEMPLE LEGEND.'—Among all the sacred places held in reverence by the Çaivites, there is none that can vie with Çithambaram (Chellumbram). Its legends are published in what is entitled The Kōyil Purāṇam, where 'Kōyil' (meaning temple in general) is used par excellence of Çithambaram.

UMĀPATHI.—This Purāṇam is attributed to 'Umāpathi Çivāçāriyar,' the author of many great treatises (before mentioned in these NOTES, II–IV), and whose date is one of the few of which we seem to have some certain knowledge. In his statement and refutation of heresies, the date 1313 is given. He was the last of the Çaiva schoolmen (whose period is the thirteenth century), contemporaries of the great mediaeval Christian schoolmen, and their not unworthy rivals in learning, acuteness, and piety. If then this work is his, the reputation of the shrine must have been great from a very early period. The legends in this Purāṇam relate to a time long antecedent to that of any of the devotees whose stories are given in the Periya Purāṇam; and, in fact, belong to the very oldest period of South-Indian legend. These myths relate especially to the Vyāghrapāda ('Saint Tiger-foot'), Patañjali ('The Serpent Devotee'), the mystic dance of Çivan, and the story of Hiraṇyavanmā ('The Golden'). With these is combined a great quantity of details of miscellaneous mythology. No 'higher criticism,' alas, has been at work here!

1. The history of Vyāghrapāda, whose image is often found in close proximity to that of Çivan, is a very peculiar one, and seems to belong to the very earliest period of the establishment of the Brāhmanical system in the South. The name is found in the Rig-Vēda; so that these legends are simple inventions to account for the appellation, and to link on the Çaiva system to the Vēdic times.

There was on the sacred lands in the North, somewhere near the banks of the Ganges, a hermit, a Brāhman of the purest lineage and perfectly conversant with the Vēdic rites, to whom a son was born endued with singular gifts and powers. The boy grew up in the wilderness under the tutelage of his father, and when he had learnt all that the father could teach him, the old hermit said to his son and disciple, 'What else can I do for thee?' The son replied, prostrating himself at his father's feet, 'Teach me what is the highest form of ascetic virtue.' The father replied that the worship of Çivan was the highest. 'And where,' inquired the son, 'can I best worship Him?' The hermit replied, 'The whole universe is the presence of Para-brahmā' (the Supreme Spirit), 'yet there are places on earth where He especially manifests Himself, even as the pervading Soul dwells and energizes in a visible and circumscribed body. There are many myriads of such shrines, but of all of them Tillai¹ is the central sanctuary' (Mūla-sthāna), 'where Çivan will receive thy homage; for there is established the līṅgam which is light².' So the youthful ascetic went on his journey, after taking an affectionate leave of his mother, followed by his father's benediction. After a long journey southward over mountains, rivers, and plains, he arrived at a spot where he found a beautiful lake, covered with lotus flowers (Çiva-gaṅgā-firitham), and a līṅgam established under the shade of a huge banyan tree. Falling on his face, he worshipped; and at once devoted himself to its service, crowning it with flowers, bathing it with water from a sacred pool hard by, and fulfilling all the usual observances. He then went onward a little distance towards the east, and there, under a fragrant tree on the borders of a beautiful tank, established for himself a second lingam as his own especial shrine, and built a hermitage of leaves and grass hard by. Thenceforward he divided his services between the two sacred spots, which are still revered in the neighbourhood of the great temple. And now, being alone, he found it difficult to accomplish his daily task according to his mind; for he wished to gather not only flowers from the tanks, and from the fields, and from shrubs, but also, and chiefly, those that grew on the lofty trees, which were sweetest of odour and richest of hue; yet, however early he went forth in the morning, before he had gathered the last of his flowers, the first had withered under the fierce sun's rays; nor could he, while laboriously and slowly climbing the lofty trees in the early hours, see rightly to select perfect flowers. His flower-worship was therefore defective and unsatisfactory. In an ecstasy of passionate prayer, he besought the assistance of the god, who appeared in answer to his loving invocation, and promised him whatever boon he sought. The grace he asked was, that his feet and hands might become those of a tiger, armed with strong claws and furnished with eyes, so that he might rapidly climb the highest trees, and see clearly to select the fittest flowers for the divine worship. This boon was granted him, and so he takes his place among the great devotees of Çivan as the 'Tiger-footed' and 'Six-eyed,' and a part of the neighbourhood derives its name from this circumstance, and is called Tiru-puli-ūr ('Sacred Tiger-town').

II. Some time afterwards he was joined by another devotee (Patañjali¹, whose form is that of a serpent. The history of this mysterious personage is closely connected with the mystic dance of Çivan. This great leader of Çivan's hosts is a form of the Āthi-çeshan, or thousand-headed serpent, on which Vishṇu slept on the ocean of milk through long periods. The wild story relates that Vishṇu one day arose from his slumber and repaired to Kailāsam, there to worship the supreme Çivan, Who told him that in the neighbouring forest of Tāragam there were multitudes of heretical Rishis or devotees, dwelling with their wives in huts of leaves. These seem in some way to have been rebels against His authority; in fact, a commentator calls them the followers of the Mimāṃsai, who, puffed up with pride of learning, regarded themselves as independent of Çivan's authority. (The whole history points to some great conflict between Vēdāntists and Çaivites in early days.) It was the intention of Çivan to visit this wilderness, in order to ascertain the state of the Rishis there, and to teach them a lesson. He bade Vishṇu accompany Him in the form of a female, and the two—Çivan as a mendicant, with the usual insignia and the bowl for the collection of alms, attended by Vishṇu as his wife—entered the jungle. It is in connection with this story especially that Çivan is called a 'deceiver.' (Comp. NOTE I.) The history that follows is in many respects far from edifying, though the author defends it, and gives to everything an allegorical meaning. At first sight all the Rishis' wives were seized with an unspeakable frenzy of passion for the false mendicant ; while all the Rishis themselves were equally infatuated by the false dame that followed Him,—Vishṇu in disguise. There was soon fierce wrath raging throughout the whole hermitage. The inhabitants of the wilderness speedily perceived that the mendicant and his wife, who possessed such a mysterious and irresistible power of attraction, were other than they seemed. They became ashamed of the ecstasies of evil desire into which they had been thrown, and gathering themselves together, the 10,000 Rishis pronounced fierce imprecations upon the disguised gods, which their wives reiterated. But the gods were unharmed. They then dug a sacrificial pit and proceeded to offer sacrifices, whose object was to ensure the destruction of the strangers. Every Vēdic rite was observed, for were they not the most accomplished of ritualists? The result was that a fierce tiger was created in the sacrificial fire which rushed forth upon Çivan ; Who, smiling gently, seized it with His sacred hands, and with the nail of His little finger ripped off its skin, and wrapped it round Himself as a soft silken garment. This accounts for Çivan's tiger-skin mantle so often mentioned in the Vāçagam. (NOTE I.) Undiscouraged by failure, they renewed their offerings, from out of which came a monstrous serpent, which He seized and wreathed round His neck, where it ever hangs ; and then began His mystic dance. And now came forth the last monster in the shape of a black dwarf, hideous and malignant, brandishing a club with eyes of fire. His name was Muyalagan ('the Club-bearer'). Upon him the God pressed the tip of His sacred foot, and broke the creature's back, so that he writhed on the ground ; and thus, with His last foe prostrate, Çivan resumed the dance of which all the gods were witnesses, while His hosts sang wild choruses. The figure of the prostrate foe, writhing under the God's foot, is reproduced in every Çaiva shrine. The Rishis, parched with the heat of their own sacrificial fires, faint with the fury of their anger, and overwhelmed with the ineffable, mysterious velocity of the motion and the splendour of the heavens opening around them, fell to the ground as dead, and then rising, worshipped the manifested God, acknowledging themselves His faithful devotees.

The very accomplished editor of this Purāṇam (and commentator upon it), a zealous reviver in modern times of the Çaiva system (Ārru-mugaṇāvalar, of Jaffna), gives his account of the meaning of this strange scene. It seems that the 10,000 Rishis dwelling in the wilderness were adherents of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā school (founded by Jaimini), whom Çivan resolved to bring into His fold, and by the strange polemic detailed in the legend He accomplished His purpose. According to our editor, these Rishis held seven erroneous doctrines : (1) they taught that the universe as it is is eternal ; (2) that souls have no author or Lord ; (3) that Çivan and all the gods are not eternal ; (4) that the Vēdam alone is eternal ; (5) that the words of the Vēdam are the only divinities ; (6) that those words reveal no other divine beings than themselves ; (7) that by performance of the sacrifices prescribed in the Vēdam, and by close adherence to the Karma-kāṇḍam (the ceremonial part), all blessings here and hereafter can be obtained. These Rishis, who were consummate masters of the Vēdic ritual, considered themselves independent of all deities, showed neither love nor devotion to Çivan, and taught the same absolute reliance upon rites and ceremonies to their wives also. To convince them (both the Rishis and their spouses) of their moral weakness and of the limited power of their most orthodox sacrifices, Çivan now appeared as the Bhikshātana-Mūrti (Mendicant Deity), with Vishṇu as the goddess(!) of Illusion, in order to bring them to His feet. They were thus forced to recognize their dependence upon Çivan, and to acknowledge that by His Grace alone they could obtain remission of sin and merit. They acknowledged that 'the virtue of them who love not Çivan's foot is sin.' The legend teaches that He subdues and wraps round Him as a girdle the tiger-like fury of human passion. The guile and malice of mankind He wears as His necklace, and beneath His feet is for ever crushed the monster of human depravity.

Of course, recognizing the spirit of this teaching, it may be allowed us to doubt whether such explanations would ever have been dreamt of but for Western teaching; and whether myths like these are the appropriate means for imparting this instruction¹.

The fact is that we have here the pre-Āryan divinity, half god, half demon, coming forth from the burning-ground where he holds his midnight orgies, dancing in the midst of his rabble rout. The commentator adds that since Çivan Himself and His disguised companion, though they excited evil desires in the poor Rishis and their wives, yet felt none themselves, and since no sin was actually committed, there is no room for condemnation of the story as a specimen of divine action².

² The composite character of what may be called the Çaiṇa religion is very marked; it has borrowed much from diverse sources, and is accordingly full of inconsistencies, sometimes speaking the language of absolute pantheism, and then again seeming to grasp most firmly the idea of a personal divinity, who is at once the Creator, the Preserver, and the Destroyer of all things. The original idea of Çivan is found in the Vēdas, but the name is simply a euphemism meaning 'propitious' or 'gracious.' Another name seldom found is Çarva, 'the Destroyer.' It seems most probable that with the idea of Rudra, the god of the Storm, and Agni, the god of Fire, is mixed up the notion of an aboriginal demon such as are still worshipped in the South of India. In the hymns to Çivan the most incongruous epithets are applied and actions ascribed to Him. At one time we see Çivan in Kailāsa, the Silver Mountain (NOTE X), surrounded by all the gods in awful state, supreme Ruler of all the worlds; at another time He is represented as wandering in the jungle or from village to village, smeared with ashes from the burning-ground, a horrible and disgusting object. So He was reviled by Dakṣa. He is at once an awful deity, a frolicsome and mischievous man with superhuman powers, and a ferocious demon; and so His Çatti, or spouse, who is worshipped under a vast variety of names throughout all India, is sometimes the gracious and beautiful mother, and sometimes the fearful and malignant DŪRGĀ. There is good reason to suppose that the worship of this malignant demoness may have been an original cult of the pre-Āryan races of India. In this way every species of inconsistency is to be found in the hymns which are sung in honour of Çivan and His spouse. Wherever two views have been held with regard to God, the Çaiṇa system asserts them both without the least attempt to reconcile them or qualify them, indicating thereby the deep feeling, of which many illustrations will be found in the translations of Çaiṇa poetry, that the thought of God so transcends human intellect that all statements regarding Him contain some truth, while none are adequate, so that all may be alike affirmed or denied. There is no doubt that the Çaiṇites of the South learnt the necessity of a visible divine Guru, an incarnate Teacher,

The goddess Pārvathi now descended upon the white bull; and Çivan joining her, they departed in triumph to Kailāsam.

Vishṇu was thus left alone with Āthi-çēshan. Both of them are overwhelmed with the glory of Çivan's mystic dance; and especially Āthi-çēshan is possessed by the one desire to behold it again. Seeing this pious aspiration, Vishṇu tells him that he will release him from further service, his place as servitor (couch and canopy) being occupied by his son, and exhorts him to resort to the northern hill of Kailāsam, there by a life of asceticism to obtain the favour from Çivan of this beatific vision. So the new serpent-devotee wends his way upward and northward, while his mighty head, with its thousand crests, each bearing a jewel, diffuses a radiance around him that makes the sun look dim, yet he is prepared to lay aside these splendours and seek only to become the least of Çivan's devotees. After awhile Çivan Himself, assuming the form of Brahmā and riding upon a swan, the usual vehicle of that god, drew near to test the sincerity of the neophyte, who had now plunged into all the austerities of the Yōga system. The disguised god represents to Āthi-çēshan that he has already done enough to merit for himself the delights of Paradise and all the divine powers of the most exalted of the heavenly beings, and offers to him any boon that he may desire. But the reply is, 'I desire not the blessedness of any separate heaven, nor the miraculous powers of Siddhi; all that I desire is to see for ever the mystic dance of the God of gods.' (Comp. Song XXXIV. 28.) The pretended Brahmā argues with him, ridicules him, and urges him to relinquish his pursuit, but he finally replies: 'Here I abide, and if now unsuccessful, I die without the beatific sight, I shall pass into other forms, and finally see that which I desire.' Recognizing his immovable fidelity, Çivan assumes His proper form, and, riding with Pārvathi on the milk-white bull, draws nigh and lays His hand in benediction upon His servant's head.

He then proceeds to instruct the new disciple, for such Āthi-çēshan thus becomes. The teachings of the God who here assumes the character of a guru first of all from Buddhism. The most elaborate arguments are to be found directed to the establishment of the proposition that man can only receive divine teaching from one who is both God and man. This is perhaps the most prominent doctrine of Çaivism: The true GURU is an incarnation of Çivan. (NOTE IV.) Another tenet, which the Pure Çaivites alone among Indian sects maintain, is the conscious immortality of the souls of the faithful. Ten different theories of the heavenly state are recounted in the Çiva-Piragācam, of which the last is the authorized teaching of the Çaiva Siddhānta philosophy. The soul in Mukti, or the state of release, retains its individual consciousness, remains for evermore a separate existence, sharing the blessedness and wisdom of the Supreme, but unmingled with His essence. In fact, the doctrine held by the Çaivites on this head is hardly to be distinguished from Christian teaching. (NOTE III.)

The prayers and hymns addressed to Çivan contemplate Him in every aspect, and are accordingly often exceedingly inconsistent, mingling, as seem to us, the most puerile conceptions with those that are in the highest degree exalted. Again, the controversies of the Çaivites with Jains and Buddhists in the South have led to a very elaborate system of mystic interpretation. Whatever Çivan does or says has some mystic meaning; such meaning being sometimes exceedingly edifying and elevated, but appearing very often to be forced and unnatural. (See NOTE XII.) One is tempted to say that the myths often obscure and even neutralize the truths which they are supposed to symbolize. The Çaivites are now divided into several sects, which agree in scarcely anything but the assertion of the supremacy of Çivan.

go back to the origin of all things. (NOTE IV.) The universe has sprung into apparent existence from primeval Māyā, as the result of Karma and for the sake of 'souls,' that it may be the scene of embodiments and of action good and evil. As an earthen vessel has the potter as its first cause, the clay as its material cause, and as its instrumental cause the potter's staff and wheel, so the universe has Māyā for its material cause, the Çatti of Çivan for its instrumental cause, and the Lord Çivan Himself as its first cause. We must note here, however, that Māyā, according to the Çaiva system, is really 'matter,' something very different from the 'Illusion' of the Vēdānta system. And now Çivan has two forms or bodies, the one which has parts and is visible, the other which is without parts, invisible and transcendent. (Sa-kaṣa and Nish-kaṣa.)

Beyond these mystic bodies is His own natural form, which infinitely transcends them. It is His essential form of wisdom, which is mere light and splendour. He is thus the supremely blessed soul of all things, and the five acts of destruction, preservation, creation, embodiment, and gracious release (NOTE I) are His ceaseless mystic dance. Of this dance the sacred Vēdas know the excellence, but are not cognizant of its cause, its time, its place, its full intention. In the forest of Taruṇam [Tārūka], in the midst of the Rishis, the gods beheld it; but, because that is not the world's centre, it trembled beneath His foot. In sacred Tillai, which is the exact centre of the universe, shall this dance be finally revealed, and there the God promises to Āthi-çēshan that he shall again behold it.

'Meanwhile,' adds the manifested Çivan, 'that thou mayest make thy way to Çithambaram, it is necessary to put off thy form of Āthi-çēshan, for the inhabitants of earth would be affrighted by thy thousand heads, and gleaming eyes, and expanded crest. Thou shalt be born, or seem to be born, of mortal parents, retaining in part thy serpent form. Then, descending into the world of dragons, thou shalt make thy way to where a hill is seen, and a cave, entering by the southern gate of which thou shalt emerge into the groves of Tillai. There is the original līṅgam, and near to that is the shrine which shall be the scene of my manifestation. There, too, thou shalt find my servant the "Tiger-foot," who is performing penance. Dwell as his companion in the hermitage, and to you both shall in due time be accorded the vision for which you are longing.'

Accordingly Āthi-çēshan, who has now become a devotee, part man and part serpent, under the name of Patañjali¹, meets with the Tiger-foot, makes for himself a hermitage, and plants a līṅgam, where he performs his daily worship. The living creatures in the wilderness at first were sore affrighted: 'We first saw the man with a tiger's feet, and now we see another, half dragon and half man,' said they, and fled; but by-and-by, accustomed to the sight, they roamed around the hermitages in perfect amity.

The next book of the Purāṇam expatiates at great length upon the first institution, as it would seem, of the great festival still observed when Çivan is supposed to dance in the Golden Hall.

NOTE VIII.

ON THE IDEA OF BHAKTI=PIETAS (भक्ति).

Compare Pope's Kurral, Introd., p. vi.

The songs of the Çaiva saints express devotion, humility, and love of unspeakable fervour. We are reminded of the Psalmist's language (Ps. xviii. 1), 'I will love Thee, O Lord, my strength'.

This spirit of personal devotion is not found (as Professor H. H. Wilson has taught us) in the Vēdas. In fact, it seems to be something pertaining to the Semitic religions especially, and possibly came into India from the extreme South, where Christian and other foreign teaching existed from the earliest centuries of the Christian era. Chaitanya (A.D. 1434) is generally, but quite erroneously, regarded as the great introducer into South India of this idea of Bhakti; but as he taught in the fifteenth century, and Māṇikka-Vāçagar cannot have lived at a later period than the ninth, it is to the latter that perhaps we are to attribute its general introduction.

Bhakti, or loving piety, is the main idea of the Çaiva system, and the fervent self-negating love and worship of Çivan is represented as including all religion, and transcending every kind of religious observance; and, since all are capable of this, men of all castes can be received as devotees and saints in the Çaiva system. Love is the fulfilment of all laws. Love elevates and perfects all. (See Hymn XXXIV.)

NOTE IX.

MĀNIKKĀ-VĀÇAGAR'S DISPUTATION WITH THE BUDDHISTS IN ÇITHAMBARAM.

It seems desirable to give a somewhat fuller translation of the sixth canto of the Vātha-ūrār-Purāṇam, entitled 'The Victory over the Buddhists in Disputation.' The story tells how Māṇikka-Vāçagar was summoned from his retreat to confront the Buddhist teachers who had come over to Çithambaram with the king of Ceylon. The day of disputation arrived. The conference was held in the hall where the Buddhists were lodged. We are told that the saint with the 3,000 resident devotees repaired to the temple, performed their devout worship, implored the grace of Çivan, and then gathered in the hall of conference. A veil was put over the saint's face that he might not even behold the ill-omened countenances of the heretics! He was then seated on a royal throne, while around and behind him were the faithful Brāhmins and devotees of every class, who had thronged in from all the country round. Amongst them the Çōra king took his seat upon a gorgeous throne, after he had duly paid homage at the sacred feet of the saint. On the other side entered the Ceylon king, who was received by the Çōran with the utmost condescension. His tributary presents were accepted with many complimentary speeches, and he was invited to occupy a seat near that of the Çōran himself.

The Buddhist guru with his disciples sat opposite, and towering around (presumably invisible as yet) were all the gods and blessed ones from all the worlds. Even the divinities of the Sun and Moon were in presence there. The salutation of the Çōra king to the saint at the opening of the conference was ominous: 'It is thine, O saint of sacred Perun-turrai, to establish the truth of the Çaiṇa wisdom. Afterwards it shall be my care to extirpate these Buddhists!' It is said that these words of the king were heard by the Ceylon champions with dismay and by the orthodox champions with delight. Thus encouraged, the saint opened the conference with no very saintly words: 'O Buddhan, who dost utter words of guile, wherefore art thou come?' The foreign guru replied in no conciliatory strain: 'I am come to tell this town that there is no god but Him whose enduring worship we perform, and to place in sight of all men, in the very Golden Hall itself, the image of our god Buddha. This is all I seek.' The saint, with withering smile, replied: 'O thou who hast performed no austerities in any former birth, can a hare become an elephant? But tell me, who is this good and mighty god of yours? And how shall souls approach his feet?' The topics then were 'God and the way of salvation.' The foreign guru replied in wrath, 'Can one show the sun's rays to the blind? Were I to tell of Buddha's greatness, I should require many thousand tongues. But our god has revealed to us the good law of the *Piḍagam*¹, in which virtue is proclaimed. In love He has been born in many shapes. He has given assurance to millions of souls, and, free from the fourfold evils of murder, theft, falsehood, and intemperance², He sits in majesty under an *Araçu*³ tree. The "trouble of birth" is coming into existence, and the ceasing of the multiform cognizance of many things arising from assembling and combination in the womb of the Five Kandhas (SKANDHA), which are form (rūpa), sentience (vedanā), sign (kurrippu; saññā), representation (bhāvanai; saṅskāra), and consciousness or clear apprehension (viññānam). And the utter perishing of these is deliverance (mōksham).⁴ This exposition of the Buddhist creed in regard to God, the universe, and salvation, requires no doubt much elucidation, and many volumes have been written about it in East and West. A summary of it is given in the *Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha*⁴, though I am not sure that much light is thrown upon it in that work. In Dr. Barth's work on 'The Religious Systems of India'¹ fuller information is given, and the authorities there referred to afford the student an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of almost all that has been said and thought on the subject. Here our one object is to show how the native mind in South India apprehended the system. Many of the details of this disputation are doubtless not to be relied on, but they show us what the traditional belief is, and explain why Buddhism lost its hold. For indeed, though Buddhists existed for some centuries afterwards in the South, they never recovered the blow inflicted upon them by the events of which we are trying to gather up the current traditions. To return to our disputants. The saint smiled in derision, and looking into the blameless face of the Çōra king, said, 'What can I reply to this Buddhist, who in unconscious frenzy utters such words as these?' He then replied to the foreign heretic: 'Thou hast told us that knowledge appears and in an instant of time disappears; all is in a ceaseless flux. If so, before thou didst finish uttering forth thy words and meanings, since thine understanding must have passed away, what revelation of truth and virtue can there be? (Since all apprehension is transient and momentary, there can be no real knower, or knowledge, or thing known.) Thus there can be in thy system neither code of laws nor revelation of truth and virtue. Again, thou tellest us that thy Buddha, thy God, was born in many successive shapes. How then can one who himself is subject to delusion and evil deliver others from these? You say, your Lord was guiltless of murder; but if he assumed all possible forms on this earth, as you say, then as a ravening tiger or as a jackal, when he was hungry was it grass that he ate, and tender shoots of trees? In thy false creed thou tellest us of Five Kandhas; and that when these pass away the soul-body perishes; and that when form, &c., cease, the soul-body is no more. If so, where is thy king, and how could he survive and appear as saviour of many men? (This idealism destroys lawgiver and deliverer alike.)

² The prohibitions of Buddhism are five. Here adultery is omitted.

'Again, since the embodied form, together with its cause (the soul and its deeds), perishes, your king, who sits under the Araçū tree, is formless, is non-existent. So annihilation is your salvation. The destruction of the Five Kandhas is deliverance!

'Yet again, you speak of twenty-one Buddhas, who existed before' (twenty-four are generally given); 'and you say that each of these in being born occasioned the death of his mother. Are such beings gods, and not rather worthy of hell?' (The reference here is not clear.)

The next objection to the Buddhistic system is that it makes no distinction between organized living creatures, their life or soul being merely the temporary and delusive product of the same organization. 'You also say that the only difference between living creatures (souls, lives, breaths) is that they are formed of different mixtures of the same four elements; yet in the night season, when thou wert asleep, if a serpent climbed over thy face, thou wouldst discern a difference, O silly reasoner. Thou hast denied the existence of any knowledge of spirit (soul, life) beyond the form. When the form then has perished, how can the life reappear under other forms? What and where is the Ātman, the self? What is it that exists (the ὑπόστασις) when the form identical with the soul has perished¹? You deny also the existence of the Fifth Element, the ether, through which sounds are transmitted; and you say there are no spaces not filled with air, water, fire, and earth. In what medium then do your four elements combine to form living beings? Where then is your Buddha (who, having gained Nirvāṇa, must be freed from all elemental combinations), in his northern dwelling under the shade of the Araṇḍa tree? You deny also that trees have souls; and yet they grow², and put forth leaves by imbibing water, and become finally dry wood and leaves! In them souls of men can obtain suitable organisms for expiation of their deeds. You say that to kill anything is a great crime, and yet you allow the eating of the flesh of animals which others have slain. Surely if they kill for your sake, you are guilty of the murder which you cause.' (See Manu V. 51.) It seems strange that this accusation should apparently be true. The same thing is referred to in the Kurraḥ (256), and it was the source of a good deal of controversy between the Jains and the Buddhists; the Buddhists refusing to kill, but not refusing to eat the flesh of the slain, while the more consistent Jains would neither slay nor eat³. 'Again, while the cause continues to exist, the effect perishes. This is the doctrine of our Āgamas. But with you it seems that the soul's perishing with the body is its salvation. Your creed is that when the Five Kandhas perish the soul is released. Tell me where and what is the released soul, whose only existence was in the momentary and fluctuating existence of the Five Kandhas. Surely form and existence and deliverance perish together!' Here the Buddhist guru, beside himself with rage, interposed: 'Thou sayest that we possess neither god nor salvation. What then is your god, and what is your salvation?' To this Māṇikka-Vāṇagar replied, 'Our God, seated in the shade of the beautiful banyan tree, taught the laws of right; and many have beheld His beauty as He performed the mystic dance. His adornment is the sacred ashes. Umai is the half of His form. He is full of grace; who can worthily proclaim our God? In Tillai's beauteous Golden Hall, He dwells, wearing as a jewel the crescent moon. Is there any end to the story of His greatness?' Here the Buddhist interposed, as indeed seems quite natural, with the inquiry: 'Whither tends all this verbiage? Answer me plainly these questions: Your God, as He sits beneath the shade of the banyan, has a rosary and repeats His prayers. Is it because He strives to think of some other gracious deity beyond Himself to whom He prays? You tell me He dances in Tillai. Does one dance for the edification of a select company of the wise, or to gratify one's own phantasy? Again, "our God wears ashes on His sacred body," you say, with proud complacency. Is it because even white ashes look pure upon His dark red skin? Then you tell me that half

² Sir M. Monier-Williams, 'Buddhism,' p. 110. Professor Rhys Davids on Buddhism, and the Bishop of Colombo's work on the same subject are indispensable.

His form is woman! Who in the world has ever heard of half a woman? And if Umai thus shares His being, it is indeed to be wondered at that your hermits leave wife and home to dwell quite alone in the wilderness! But the mocking, cynical laugh of the Buddhist company was too much for the Çaiṇa champion, who scornfully interposed, 'Thou art unworthy to listen to high mysteries, the knowledge of which constitutes the blessedness of these assembled devotees. None can know these things who have not first performed penitential acts to which thou art a stranger. Yet know thou that our God carries the prayer-rosary in order that all His saints may from His example learn to pray and mortify themselves. The rosary is like the weapon in the Master's hand, with which, Himself unassailable, He is teaching His neophytes to make war. Thou sayest that our God dances as dance the wanton ones of earth, that eyes of flesh may see Him. Nay, but as the fire runs through the fuel uncontaminated, so doth our God pervade all souls and all bodies with His mystic energies: He dances in the universe and in the soul. You ask about the sacred ashes. He wears them to assuage the sorrows of all souls. This act of His is like the nursing mother's taking medicines herself to heal the maladies of her tender infant. And thou askest why Çivan shares Umai's form. The answer is that to give mystic wisdom to His worshippers He assumes this mystic twofold form. Çivan the Supreme, who rides upon the mighty bull, commingles with the souls of men like the fragrance¹ in the flowers; but this thou knowest not. He is the First; He is the Yōgi; He is the Enjoyer; He is the Formless; He is the Splendour; He is the Being of many forms; He is the Sea of delight. Who knows His crown, who knows the sole of His foot, save that He fills the Golden Hall where virtue rules, and sorrow is not?' This closes the controversy, but the sequel as given in the legend is stranger still.

When we sum up this controversy it seems as though strict logic had no place in it, and the result is made to depend upon the double miracle, the infliction of dumbness upon the Buddhist disputants and the restoration of speech to the daughter of the Ceylon king². Each party has expounded his tenets and reviled those of his opponent; but the only thing that looks like real reasoning is Mānikka-Vāçagar's treatment of the Buddhist idea of the Kandhas. It has been too much the custom in India to hide poverty of thought under a multitude of high-sounding words, and to regard any explanation that is not absolutely absurd as a proof. The Kandhas, or aggregates, represent no facts or realities, but imaginary states or conditions of finite existence, and, according to the popular view of the case, the whole theory means this: there is an unreal something, not embodied, not permanent, indeed not really existent, to which clings the responsibility of certain deeds, how done, or by whom, or when, is entirely uncertain ; and this shadow of being must have an opportunity of expiating or working out the results of these deeds, and therefore this Ego, without fixed principle, or substratum of existence, or soul, or body, obtains in this world an embodiment. Of this the first element is (1) form ; the second is (2) sensation ; the third is (name or) (3) sign (or characteristic qualities); the next is the (4) deeds which determine the faculties and dispositions of the mind ; the last is (5) individual consciousness. These elements combine, arrange, and rearrange themselves, suffering infinite modifications, till death dissolves the bond. If Nirvāṇa has not been obtained, and so another metempsychosis is necessary, what survives,—the deeds without the doer,—instantaneously receives another embodiment, and so on until at length the deeds have been atoned for ; and, as it necessarily follows, the shadow of being is annihilated ; and, as the whole universe is compounded of the same Kandhas, it follows that there is in reality no god, no soul, and of course no immortality, nothing in fact but appearance and sensation. As presented in Tamil writings, the whole system seems fragmentary.

¹ Kandam in Tamil (Sansk. GANDHA) means also fragrance. Sweet odours are reckoned to be five, the pañcha-Kandham. It seems that there is an allusion to this here. The five Kandhas (Pāli for Sans. SKANDHA) would be unintelligible to Tamil people, and the general idea among the vulgar was that the Buddhists taught that the universe was formed from combinations of odours! Compare Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha, ch. ii. p. 22, Kēchana Bauddhā, &c. The Tamil student should read கந்தம் (XXX).

² She is introduced in Song XII, as the respondent. See note there.

Māṇikka-Vāṇagar presses this upon his opponent, who has nothing to say in defence or explanation, but reviles the Āiava mythology, the origin of which he finds in the Vēdas themselves. Here the Buddhist seems to have had surer ground to tread upon, and the only reply that was possible to Māṇikka-Vāṇagar was to explain away everything as allegorical and mystical. These explanations are poetical, but very far-fetched, and historically find no sanction in the original myths. They are ingenious, but adapted only to the comprehension of a refined and select body of the initiated : to the world the system is one of puerile idolatries and superstitions. Such at least was the Buddhist's idea. It will be noted that each party claimed for its master the attribute of 'Revealer of Virtue.' Buddha under the Bōdhi tree, and Āivan under the Āla tree, both taught the ancient law of right, and on this matter no controversy arose. The Tamilians are right in declaring that the morality of Buddhism is essentially that of the Upanishads except in the matter of forbidding sacrifice ; and in regard to the last point the fact that the Buddhist sanctioned the eating of the flesh of animals, though he himself would not slay them, overbalanced in the mind of the Āiavites all the ethic excellence of their system (Kurraḷ, ch. xxxiii). It will be apparent that the victory of the sage was one of sentiment and of authority, but not in any way of logic or learning¹.

There are three Tamil works of Jain or Buddhist origin which throw great light upon these poems. These are (1) the Jivaga Chintāmaṇi; (2) the Čilapp-athigāram; and (3) the Maṇi-Mēgalal. These have only very recently been made thoroughly accessible to Tamil students by the labours of Vē. Čāmi-nāthaiyar, the very learned head pandit of the Kombakōnam Government College. From these works many sentences may be extracted which have been the germ of longer passages in these poems, and in other better known Tamil classics ; but it is especially in the epithets applied to the Supreme that a very interesting correspondence can be traced.

The condition of the Tamil lands at the time when our sage flourished can best be realized by a study of the latter two of the works we have mentioned. There seems to have been a most remarkable mixture in the south of Čaivism, Jainism, Buddhism, and the ancient demonolatriy. The charity and piety of the Buddhist teachers seems to have been acknowledged

NOTE X.

ÇIVAN ENTHRONED ON THE SILVER MOUNTAIN.

‘Çivan sat upon His throne, and on His left side was with Him His gracious energy, the world’s mother, the goddess Pārvathi. He is from eternity free from all impurity, the Everlasting, the All-Pervader, possessed of all wisdom, all pre-eminence, and all spontaneous grace. Through His infinite compassion towards souls, for which they can render Him no return, He ever performs, without performance, the acts of creation, protection, destruction, veiling and dispensing grace. He is the first and only God, having one sacred face and three eyes, which are the glowing splendours of the sun, the moon, and the god of fire. His crest of matted hair (சூடல், Sans. JAṬĀ) is crowned with the Ganges, the crescent moon, and the Kondrai (cassia) garland. His sacred ears are adorned with earrings of conch-shell and flower-petals (சேரி). His throat is black with the poison churned out from the milky sea. (See notes to Lyric XII.) His sacred hands grasp, one the antelope, and one the axe; one gives the sign of safety, and the fourth assurance of gifts of grace. His body, ruddy like coral, is besmeared with sacred ashes. His breast is adorned with the white investing thread and necklaces consisting of the bones of innumerable Brahmās and Viṣṇus and the skulls of Brahmās of innumerable aeons. He has girt Himself with the tiger’s skin (நெரு VII). His waist is resplendent with dagger and girdle. His feet, like red lotus flowers, tinkle with the heroic anklets and sounding bells. Such is the body that He wears as Çri-Kaṇṭhar (He of the auspicious throat). He sits on the silver hill of Kailāsam, whose innumerable white peaks are adorned with divers jewels. There in a shrine of ruddy gold He gleams, while His crowding hosts make music with innumerable instruments. Many on either side wave the white Çāmaram (the white tail of the Yāk, or Bos grunniens), and many others wave flower-twined fans. The heavenly musicians and choristers of every degree sing in sweet harmony. The leaders of His hosts,—their frames dissolved in ecstasy like wax in fire, on all sides, and in many respects left nothing untaught that the Tamil mind considered necessary. And the doctrine of the metempsychosis taught by all of these was really and essentially one and the same. At the same time the fancy of these Jain and Buddhistic authors lead them to depict many scenes which are altogether inconsistent with Çaivite opinions. The way in which the heroes and heroines in these romantic epics are permitted to see, as in a mirror, the whole history of their former embodiments, and thus to trace out the causes of their present sufferings and struggles is very beautiful; but of this idea our bard seems to have had no cognizance. It is a very remarkable circumstance that over both Jainism and Buddhism the Çaiva Siddhāntam gained so complete a victory. These three authors have been for ages almost obsolete throughout the Tamil country, and this is not owing simply to their obscurity and artificial character, but to the victory gained over those systems by the energetic propagators of Çaivism. It is much to be wished that these Tamil writings should be carefully compared with the Buddhist Jātakas, and the tales current among the Jains. The machinery of these poems is quite different from anything we find elsewhere in Tamil literature. Fairies, persons possessed of magic powers,—wonderful and mysterious manifestations,—are recorded in every canto, and we are reminded rather of the Arabian Nights than of any of the Pauranic legends. It must, however, be admitted that the morality is generally of a high order, although perhaps differing essentially from that of the Kurra], and still more from that of the Christian system.

their quivering bodies thrilled in every part with joy, while rapture fills them as the torrent from the open sluice, plunging into the very gulf of delight,—were dancing and singing before His face. The ascetics, hands clasped above their heads, were reciting the Upanishads which are the heads of the Vēdas. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Indra with the other gods stood afar off, kept back by the wand of the sacred Nandi, and, with hands upon their mouths, humbly made known their wants to Him who sat upon the throne.'

I have translated this literally from the introduction to the Periya Purāṇam in order to show the mythological conception entertained by the Āiavas of the object of their worship. Nothing can be nobler and more spiritual than the accounts found in many of their writings of PATTI (the Lord); but mingled with everything are the incongruous conceptions, a few of which are here shadowed forth. In such descriptions every legend is introduced, every form in which the God is anywhere worshipped is brought in, and the result often to our minds is inexpressibly grotesque. Yet for every particular an explanation is offered, mystic meanings are given, and the whole is resolved into a series of allegories which are supposed to teach the gracious operations of Āivan, the Lord of all. In reading these legends it is necessary to keep always in memory this twofold character of the religious system of South India. Gross and ridiculous representations (so they strike the foreigner) are found in juxtaposition with refined, pathetic, devout, and even sublime expressions. This is peculiarly the case in the lyrics of the profound enthusiast Māṇikka-Vāṇagar. The Āivan here pictured was seemingly always before the sage's eye.

NOTE XI.

THE ĀIVA SIDDHĀNTA SYSTEM OF PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION IN SOUTH INDIA.

The Āiva Siddhānta system is the most elaborate, influential, and undoubtedly the most intrinsically valuable of all the religions of India. It is peculiarly the South-Indian, and Tamil, religion; and must be studied by every one who hopes to understand and influence the great South-Indian peoples. The Vaiṣṇava sect has also many influential followers in the Tamil lands, but these are chiefly immigrants from the North. Āivism is the old prehistoric religion of South India, essentially existing from pre-Āryan times, and holds sway over the hearts of the Tamil people. But this great attempt to solve the problems of God, the soul, humanity, nature, evil, suffering, and the unseen world, has never been fully expounded in English. Its text-books (probably its sources) exist in Tamil only, and in high Tamil verse, which is often made of set purpose obscure and difficult. (Classical Tamil is very little studied, yet this key alone can unlock the hearts of probably ten millions of the most intelligent and progressive of the Hindu races.)

In a period quite antecedent to all historic data, the native Dravidian religion was a kind of Āivism. It had peculiar forms of sacrifice, ecstatic religious dances, rites of demon worship, and other ceremonies which still exist among the villagers of the extreme South¹, and more or less among the rural population everywhere. Much of this may be traceable to 'ancestor worship.' (Comp. Dr. Charles, 'A Critical History of a Future Life,' pp. 19-40.) In process of time northern—Āryan, Vēdic, Brahmanical—influences were brought to bear upon these original forms of worship, and those who introduced the Vēdic religion into the South found a place for the superstitions of the aborigines in their own system. The inhabitants of South India adopted to a great extent the social institutions, the myths, and forms of worship of the Āryan settlers. In the Vēdas Çivan is not named, but the god Rudra, the god of storms and tempests, seems to have been the type of a divinity most in unison with the ideas of the inhabitants of the South, who probably came originally from Central Asia, and brought with them their Scythian divinity, who was cruel, and was worshipped with rude and cruel ceremonies. Rudra-Çivan became therefore the type of the divinity, as the destroyer. In process of time Buddhism and the Jain system found their way into the South, propagated by zealous and able men, and thus undoubtedly a softer and more genial character was imparted to the whole of South India. Meanwhile on the eastern coast Christianity was introduced by the Nestorians, and spread abroad very rapidly, becoming widely known and exerting great influence even where it did not make converts. It is undoubtedly the fact that these Christian influences pervaded the whole South. Muhammadanism also in various directions at a later period entered the Tamil land, and exerted great influence over the thinkers in those regions. Thus the elements out of which the present and finished Çaivism of the South has been evolved are numerous and diverse. It must also be noticed that since the twelfth century the Vaishṇava system has been a formidable rival of Çaivism, and the rivalry has tended to develope and systematize the dogmatic parts of the system most decidedly. We have now to do with the historic beginnings of South-Indian Çaivism. A sage from the North, whose name was Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, in the eighth century came from Behār and taught the existence of a personal deity in opposition to the Buddhists. His disciple was the very celebrated sage Çaṅkara Āchārya, who is the father of religious philosophy in the South. Various sects claim him as their founder, but he certainly was a Çaivite, and is regarded as an incarnation of Çivan Himself.

The great revival and spread however of Çaivism is due to certain saints or devotees who were men of great devotion, unwearied activity, and remarkable power. The first of these was Māṇikka-Vāçagar, whose date is uncertain, but may reasonably be assigned to the tenth century A. D., or earlier. Probably about a century later arose Nāna Sambandhar and the various lesser devotees whose legends are collected, amplified, and idealized in the Periya Purāṇam. Some notice of these is essential to a clear view of our subject. The next stage in the history is the rise of the great philosophical school called the ÇAIVA SIDDHĀNTA system. These sages were fourteen in number, and are called the Santāna gurus ('succession of teachers'). The only date which appears to be reliable is that given by one of these, Umāpathi, in a polemical treatise. He wrote in 1313. Thus the early fourteenth century was remarkable for the existence of a most able and zealous band of philosophical Çaivites, whose influence still pervades the land. Their system is called the Pathi-paçu-pācam. Here Pathi is the Lord or Supreme Being, Paçu is the soul, and Pācam is the bond; and on the interpretation of these three words everything depends. The Lord of course is Çivan, and the attributes with which He is invested are very remarkable. In the Çaivite catechism the question occurs, 'What is Pathi?' and the answer is, 'He is the eternal, all-pervading, all-wise, eternally blessed, absolutely independent Creator of all, who is from all eternity free from taint of evil.' One of the most valuable of the text-books of this system is the Tiru-arul-payan, 'Fruit of Divine Grace.' (NOTES II, IV, VII.)

NOTE XII.

THE THREE ÇAIVA CATEGORIES (PADĀRTHA).

In the first quatrain of his greatest work (the Çiva-Piragācam), Umāpathi, the ablest of the Çaiva schoolmen, throws down the gauntlet and challenges the teachers of all the Hindu schools, declaring that the real and only intention of all the Vēdas and other sacred writings is summed up in the three mystic words PATHI (the Lord), PAÇU (the flock), and PAÇAM (the bond). These are the three categories of the Çaiva Siddhānta system. Though this system received its final developement some centuries after our sage, implicitly he held its principles, and it is necessary for the illustration of these poems and legends to bring together, connect, and illustrate the main dogmas of that elaborate, thoughtful, and influential religious philosophy which has been evolved in connection with these words.

The three eternal entities of the system are (1) the LORD, who is Çivan Himself; (2) the aggregate of all souls or lives that constitutes Çivan's FLOCK, which, by His grace, He wills to conduct to the blessedness of final disentanglement from all embodiments; and (3) the BOND, or the sum total of all those elements which bind souls and hinder them from finding release in union with the 'Lord.' These three—Pathi, Paçu, Pāçam—are equally eternal, existing unchanged and undiminished through successive aeons. The idea of the 'Lord' is a philosophical refinement of that of the Çivan of the older mythology. Among other titles given to Rudra we find that of Paçunām-pati ('Lord of the flocks'), and from that has been evolved the ingenious allegory on which this system is founded. Umāpathi's doctrine in regard to the 'Lord' is set forth in many quatrains of his text-book, the admirable Çiva-Piragācam (I. 1, pp. 59-63). This is the sum of his theology as to this topic:—

- i. Pathi is the Supreme Being;
- ii. He is neither permanently manifested, nor unmanifested;
- iii. He is without qualities or distinguishing marks¹;
- iv. He is free from all impurity;
- v. He is absolutely one;
- vi. He is eternal;
- vii. He is the source of wisdom to innumerable souls;
- viii. He is not subject to fluctuations;
- ix. He is immaterial (indiscernible);
- x. He is the essence of bliss;

- xi. He is difficult of access to the perverse, but the final goal of those that truly worship Him ;
- xii. He is infinitely small and infinitely great ;
- xiii. He is the true Çivan, or 'blessedness.'

The second of these statements is thus explained : Whatever has a visible form must be subject to the laws of production, maintenance, and decay ; therefore the Supreme is without visible form. On the other hand, that which has no form by which it can become manifest is a mere fancy, like the 'horn of a hare' or 'flowers of the atmosphere.' But Pathi is real and makes Himself known to souls. This will be further explained in connection with another part of the subject.

Çivan as thus described is said to be Nish-kaḷa, i.e. without parts or adjuncts, perfect in Himself, the absolute Lord. But He is capable of manifestation, and in order to energize in souls, and in the various constituents of that eternal aggregate of impurity which constitutes the bond, He assumes a Ça-kaḷa nature, i.e. one composed of a species of spiritual body.

We here append Chapters I, II of Tiru-aruḷ-payan, which are full of interest :—

CHAPTER I.

THE NATURE OF THE SUPREME LORD : PATHI.

The Disciple asks :

What is Çivan's (Pathi, the LORD'S) essential nature¹ ?

I.

The Guru answers :

Like the vowel A², wisdom's self, the matchless KING, everywhere³ abides, and all things fills.

Commentary. The vowel letter A is understood in all letters, and is their life ; so the matchless LORD fills all souls, Himself unchanged, and is their life.

Summary. Here is a statement of (1) the existence of the King ; and of (2) His inseparable union with all souls (all that lives).

If the LORD be thus beyond the reach of mind, speech, and touch, how can souls be freed from *pollution*⁴ and obtain deliverance ?

II.

That souls⁵ may reach His state, His *Energy*⁶ gathers them in.

Our LORD is (nevertheless) One and Indivisible.

Com. All souls are destined by Grace to dwell at length within the abode of pure and infinite wisdom; and this is effected by the ENERGY of Çivan, called *Parā-patti*¹, which abides in Him, inseparable from Himself, and is the instrument of His gracious operation.

Sum. In this complet it is taught (1) that the LORD exists in oneness with an Energy (Çatti); and (2) that this Energy bears the form of Grace.

Is your LORD then great and glorious?

III.

In greatness, subtile nature, exceeding grace, and precious boon He grants
He is the INCOMPARABLE.

Com. There is nothing to which He can be likened in regard to (1) His infinite greatness, which is beyond human thought, (2) His minutely penetrating, all-pervasive subtilty², which unseen carries on the five mysterious operations, His boundless grace, and the wondrous gifts thereby bestowed on devout souls.

Sum. Here the incomparable greatness of the LORD is asserted.

[Kurral, 7.]

Why call Him the Incomparable? Is He not one of three?

IV.

He creates, preserves, and to the power of Māyā all consigns :
He is the Refuge that ne'er departs.

Com. The Supreme Lord 'CREATES' (or evolves) the world and its phenomena by the instrumentality of Brahmā, His first creation. He sustains them through Viṣṇu, His next creation. In the end He will 'DESTROY' (or involve) the phenomenal universe by causing it to be merged in Māyā (= chaos). He Himself, Refuge of all souls, nevermore departs.

Sum. Here it is shown that it is He who performs the three works of creation, preservation, and 'DESTRUCTION.'

[Çiva-ñāna-bōdham, Aph. I. NOTE XIV.]

Is He Formless, or has He Form, or is He at once the Formless and manifested in Form?

v.

He is Formless and has Form. To those who know Him
He has the Form of Wisdom.

Com. His formless Essence is fourfold : Çivan, Çatti, Nātham, and Vinthu. His manifestations in form are four : Mahēçuran, Uruttiran, Māl, and Ayan. In hearts that know Him the Lord wears the Form of Wisdom.

Sum. The Invisible Essence and Visible Forms of the Supreme Lord are here explained.

[There is a ninth state, or manifestation, of the Lord : as Sadā-Çivan. The two states are the Nish-kala and Ça-kala, p. lxvi. See Çl. Pira. I. 1, p. 63. This Gnostic series symbolizes the evolutionary character of the unfolding of the universe in each aeon.]

If He have aught, some one must have endowed Him with it. Is it not so?

VI.

Innumerable souls through His indwelling fulness attain to know;
there is none above our King who to Him can thus impart.

Com. To all souls He gives suitable embodiments, and thus they gain self-conscious knowledge; but there is no Being who in like manner could assign to Him form, or impart to Him knowledge. Our King assumes all forms He pleases.

³ Hymn III. 1-5. திருமுருகாழ்வாரியார், pp. 17-29.

Sum. Here it is taught that Çivan's divine nature is UNDERIVED.

[Comp. Çi. Pira. I. 3, p. 65, &c. This is in opposition to Vaishnavas and others (Pañja-rāttiri, see Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha), who hold that the Creator (Brahmā) gave Him His form.]

Can all men attain the knowledge of this Lord?

VII.

As unfailing wisdom He never withdraws Himself from His servants;
though He is the King, WHOM THE HEAVENLY ONES SEE NOT.

Com. In the lotus of devout souls He ever inseparably dwells as unfailing Wisdom; yet is He not to be beheld even by the gods.

Sum. This declares the method in which the Lord dispenses grace.

[Comp. Kurraḷ, I. 2, pp. 3, 184 :

'His feet, Who o'er the full-blown flower hath past, who gain
In bliss long time shall dwell above this earthly plain.'

The Tiruvāçagam is full of this idea. Comp. Lyric II (pp. 8-16); with note on the Arundā-çalam myth, to which this is the key (p. 198).]

Is the Lord confined to one spot, or is He all-pervading?

VIII.

Everywhere through all He dwells pervasive, like fire in heated water; yet with none identified, abides alone.

Com. All worlds, and all souls, infinite in number, He pervades, as fire heats water, entering it and uniting with it. He is not confined by the limits of the natures He pervades, but exists alone, uncontaminated.

Sum. Here it is said that Çivan fills all things, but is affected by none.

Does the Lord always manifest Himself to all in one manner?

IX.

To those who draw not nigh, He gives no boon; to those who draw nigh, all good: the great Çaṅkaran knows no dislike.

Com. If men draw not nigh to worship and serve Him, He imparts not to them the sweetness of His grace, nor delivers them from embodiments, deaths, and sorrow. To those who draw nigh to Him He gives all these good things. He is ever the impartial Benefactor of all!

Sum. Çivan is without desires or aversions; dispensing to every one according to his deeds.
[See Kurraḷ, 4.]

Can those who worship and serve Him obtain that gift?

X.

Ponder well! doubtless there is a Wisdom, all-pervading,—balm,— that clinging malady of 'birth' unfailing heals.

Com. Our Lord in the form of Wisdom, uniting inseparably with and joined to souls, is the sure remedy for the eternally clinging disease of human embodiment. This is undoubted. Ponder it well with ceaseless love!

Sum. The necessity and reward of devoutly serving the Lord.
[Comp. Gītā.]

CHAPTER II.

THE NATURE OF THE 'FLOCK,' PAÇU; OR, THE STATE OF SOULS.

This chapter expounds the nature and condition of the aggregate of all souls. The Lord (Paṭhi) is One; the Flock (Paçu) is manifold and made up of innumerable souls.

The Disciple asks :

Are there any who may bear this name ?

XI.

The Guru answers :

Days past, and days to come, are numberless ; so is the company that have renounced, and hereafter will renounce.

Com. The aeons in which evolution and involution have taken place, and shall yet go on, are infinite. The number of souls that have gained the feet of the Supreme, and of those who in the unending future shall obtain Grace, is infinite. So this Flock cannot be counted.

Sum. Here the existence and multiplicity of souls is taught.

The exquisitely figurative word 'flock' suggests the idea of the Great and Good Shepherd, and of the time 'When there shall be one Flock [fold] and one Shepherd.'

Are all these souls of the same grade ?

XII.

There are those with three impurities ; those set free from one of these ;
and those who have but one.

Com. Darkness, deeds, and delusion,—these three impurities exist in some. There are some who, delusion having been removed, are still under the influence of darkness and deeds,—subject to a twofold impurity. There are others in whom the impurity of darkness alone remains. Souls may thus be arranged in three classes¹.

Sum. Souls are distributed into three categories, according to their different conditions from of old.

Are any of these above the others ?

XIII.

All the three classes are subject to the original 'impurity' :
to those who cling to Him the unseen Lord is Help.

Com. The members of all these three classes are alike subject to the original, eternal impurity of Āṇavam. They must all therefore look to the invisible Lord for ultimate deliverance.

Sum. Here it is taught that the original impurity of darkness clings to all, though one class has been set free from Māyā, and a second class from Kanmam also.

[The second line of this couplet is obscure ; my rendering is literal.]

Is there no knowledge in souls not devoted to Him ?

XIV.

Things seen daily are mingled confusedly in dreams !
What can men do whose might of intellect is such ?

Com. Things which men see in their waking hours are oftentimes reproduced with strange perversions in their sleep. The author therefore asks, in contemptuous irony, what reliance can be placed on knowledge subject to such vicissitudes ?

Sum. It is shown us in this and in the next couplet that the soul has neither knowledge (self-consciousness) nor active faculty without a primal Source from which these flow.

¹ The three classes are : 1. Ça-kaḥar [Sans. SA-KALA = 'with Kalai']. These are under the influence of all the three Radical impurities : Āṇavam, Kanmam, and Māyai, which constitute the threefold BOND. (NOTE XV.) 2. Praḥaiyā-kaḥar [Sans. PRALAYA-KALA]. These are under the influence of two Radical impurities : Āṇavam and Kanmam. 3. Viññāna-kaḥar, who are freed from all but Āṇavam. A-kaḥar (opposed to Sa-kaḥar) = 'those without Kalai.'

In slumber, it is true, comes forgetfulness; but in waking hours have souls no innate knowledge?

XV.

Without organs of sense reason comes not into contact with the objective :
how then can soul be said to know?

Com. The ear and other sense-organs are required by the soul as necessary instruments of perception; this being the case, how can the soul itself be said to possess knowledge? Its knowledge comes to it from perception of the world of sense.

Sum. This is to be taken in combination with the former.

But has the soul no knowledge whatever save through the senses?

XVI.

Light and darkness, and the phenomenal universe, are not perceptible to the eye obscured by cataract.

Com. Light from sun, moon, or fire; darkness which brings confusion; and the varied world of phenomena, appear not to the blinded eye. So, if the soul have no faculty of vision or perception, what can sense-organs do for it?

Sum. The souls of men have merely an imparted faculty of perceiving what is presented as an object of perception.

[An innate faculty, like power of vision, an-ā (comp. Kurraḥ), is necessary to sense-perception. The soul, with material sense-organs, placed over against the object-world, must have a divinely-given faculty of using those organs; alone with senses and objects it could know nothing.]

[Ṣaṭ-ṣaṭ, ṣaṭ-ṣaṭ iv.]

Ṣaṭ, Aṣaṭ, and Sat-aṣaṭ: What is there then that can perceive these three?

XVII.

The 'REAL' draws not nigh the 'UNREAL.' The 'unreal' knows nothing.
Soul that takes cognizance of both these, must itself be both.

Com. ČIVAN, who is abiding knowledge, has no need to contemplate and know the 'Bond,'—inert matter,—the threefold impurities which imprison the soul. The BOND itself, with all the elemental categories, is material and unintelligent. The SOUL (Paṣu), which puts forth energies and contemplates both Pathi and Pāṣam, must partake of both natures, (that is, has affinities with both matter and spirit.)

Sum. Here we are taught that souls are not pure knowledge (like Pathi), nor mere matter (like Pāṣam).

Can you illustrate by a figure this twofold nature of souls?

XVIII.

In this world are there not things which are dark in the darkness, and light in the light?

Com. There are things, like the eye, crystal and ether, which are dark when no light is shed upon them, but kindle into brightness when irradiated from without. So the soul is intelligent or unintelligent, according as divine irradiation is given or withheld.

Sum. There exists something intermediate between pure intellect and insensible matter, which something has potentialities of knowledge.

[Čivan is thus (ṣaṭ-ṣaṭ) 'life of life,' 'soul of soul.' It is 'the inspiration of the Almighty that gives man understanding.']

Since light too is with the soul from eternity, why should the soul have any connection with darkness? Can light and darkness co-exist?

XIX.

To the eye of an owl light itself is dense darkness, so are they whose eyes behold not Vāman.

Com. When the sun rises the eye of the owl receives not its beams ; so the soul we have spoken of sees not the light of Çivan's wisdom, being veiled by Āṇavam.

Sum. This illustrates the way in which souls fail to recognize Him who is their Light and Life.

[See Çi. Nāna-pīra. II. 20, p. 313 : Vāman, arundh, see Lex.]

When shall the ignorance of these souls disperse and grace be given ?

XX.

From eternity until now souls bear the load. Alas !
when shall they know the grace divine ? Ah ! abiding woe !

Com. The couplet echoes the commiserating exclamation, 'When dawns the day of grace?'

Sum. A piteous declaration of the sorrow that the Flock of all souls endures.

NOTE XIII.

THE BRIDE, PARĀ-ÇATTI = ÇIVAN'S 'PRIMAL ENERGY.'

In order that the supreme Pathi may energize in soul and in the Pāçam (Malam) from which the universe is evolved, there proceeds forth from him an energy (Çatti, ञट्टि, Sans. ÇAKTI) which in its various manifestations will require attentive consideration. The doctrine is thus summed up : The supreme Çatti, or essential energy that subsists in and one with Çivan, sends forth in successive developements (1) the energy of desire, (2) the energy of wisdom, and (3) the energy of action. These powers in operation constitute the sacred body of Çivan. This 'the uncontaminated one approaches, manifesting himself as inscrutable grace, and thus joins himself to the pure Māyā.' He then approaches 'impure Māyā, the causal one, and establishes bodies, organs, worlds, and fruition in all their plenitude, in order that deeds eternal and inexorable may be consumed,'—as it is curiously phrased. Thus souls are embodied, and involved in the bond from which, when deeds are consumed, they will be evolved. This is the mystery of the developed and undeveloped forms of the Supreme. What is specially important here is that the supreme divinity (Pathi) manifests Himself and operates in the universe only through his ÇATTI, or energy. 'Çivan and Çatti are as the sun and its radiance.' This noun is in Sanskrit feminine, and thus the effective energy of Çivan is represented as a female,—a goddess ; and it is very wonderful what an amount of mythology and ritual has been accumulated around this one word¹. The question is repeated again and again, How is Pathi, Who is pure spirit, to mingle with and energize in souls and amid impurities ? and the answer is, that He does so by sending forth an energy that is like a ray of light, a mighty influence that quickens, illuminates, and purifies all things ; and this energy, personified as a goddess, has led to all the developements of Çatti worship. This is in fact the way in which the Çaiṇa philosophy bridges over the gulf between the finite and the infinite. (Comp. Çiva-ñāna-bōdham, p. 54, Madras, 1825.)

There is hardly a glimpse of this idea in the BHAGAVAD-GĪTĀ, and its

¹ It is curious to compare the mysticism of Novalis (Les disciples à Sais, in Mäterlinck, p. 47) : 'Il est heureux ce fils, ce favori de la nature, à qui elle permet de la contempler en cette dualité, sous la forme d'une force mâle et femelle, et en son unité, sous la forme d'un hymen éternel et sans fin . . . sa religion sera le véritable et essentiel naturalisme.'

developement in the Siddhānta seems to mark a decided advance in theological science. The very precious germ-thought would seem to be that—so much emphasized in the Christian Revelation—of the Spirit of God moving over, through, and in the entire creation, and especially energizing in human souls. It is curious to recall the Greek Çaktis, the Eumenides, the Muses, and other feminine personifications. In Latin the names of Venus and Diana correspond to the Tamil Ammāi. And in Dante, Beatrice seems almost to take the place of Umarī, since from her all light, knowledge, and help proceed. Mary, Beatrice, Lucia, Rachel, and Matilda all resemble the Çaivite Çaktis. Indeed, if the magnificent hymn ‘Veni, Creator Spiritus!’ were translated literally into Tamil verse, it would seem to express in a much more appropriate, dignified, and forcible manner the whole idea which lies at the root of this part of the Çaiva system,—that all light, knowledge, power, freedom, and sanctification are from the Blessed Spirit sent forth by the Father for the salvation of His children. Of course Christians do not regard the Divine Spirit as really a dove,—and the representation of the divine energy as a woman is surely not regarded as essential to the fullest developement of the great truth it is supposed to symbolize.

We must not omit reference to the personification of Wisdom in the Christian sacred scriptures as well as in the apocryphal books. Many of these passages could be used, almost precisely as they stand, by a Çaivite in expounding his views of Çakti. The Alexandrian school of philosophy and theology has followed out this course of personification to a great extent, and it does not seem to be improbable that those thinkers were influenced partly by South-Indian ideas. Gnosticism in all its developements seems to have come from the East.

NOTE XIV.

‘EVOLUTION,’ ‘PRESERVATION,’ AND ‘INVOLUTION’ IN OPPOSITION TO ATHEISM.

The doctors of the Çaiva Siddhānta are strenuous opponents of the atheistic school, or Lōkāyatikas, as is seen in the Sarva-darçana-saṅgraha, chapter i, where they are called Chārvākas. These deny the existence of a Creator, and the argument against them for the existence of a supreme Being, who evolves, sustains, and involves the phenomenal universe, is as follows: ‘The whole universe, with its entire complement of beings, male, female, and without life, comes into phenomenal existence, subsists awhile, and then subsides; this is our experience. It is therefore necessary to assert the existence of a Lord, or Paṭhi, who creates, maintains, and destroys. The reappearance, after dissolution, of the phenomenal universe in a new æon is the result of the bond,—impurity. For souls must again and again have embodiments; there must be a long chain of metempsychoses in order that these impurities may be matured, work out their legitimate tendencies, and produce their various results in the experience of each being. Only when these are exhausted, may souls be released from their power. Since then these embodied living ones (souls) come upon the stage of being, act awhile, and then pass away, there must be a Lord (Paṭhi), who directs their course; especially as every element of the bond is unintelligent, and cannot seek out for itself the souls to which it clings; nor can the souls themselves select their own appropriate forms and successive embodiments, and cannot of themselves select the deeds which pertain to them. It is therefore necessary that the Supreme, the Uncontaminated One, should preside over and direct each embodiment. We thus see in this universe a succession of living beings with material environments. Now, what is thus manifestly subject to decay, and is ever being renewed and changed, must have an intelligent Author, Sustainer, and Restorer of its manifold frame. Therefore the Lord exists, and is first, and midst, and last.'

This teaching is a strong and necessary protest against the atheistic Sāṅkhya school of Kapila, who gives to his primordial matter (மூல-பிரகிருதி) the power of self-developement, while the Siddhānta most emphatically and with powerful reasonings teaches that the whole universe must be for ever inert, unintelligent, and lifeless without the operation of Paṭhi and his manifested energy.

NOTE XV.

ĀṆAVAM, OR THE 'BOND OF FINITE IGNORANCE' (ஈனாம், மலம்).

This is in later Āiava books called ĀṆAVAM (= minuteness), an abstract noun from Aṇu (அணு, அணு), 'anything minute, subtle.' It is a word in its metaphysical sense coined by the Tamil Āiavites, and corresponds in some ways to 'original sin': Sahaja-Mala.

Presented in this formal way it is the latest developement of Āiavism. (Thirteenth century.)

The following from the Tiru-arul-payan, Chapter III, throws as much light upon this conception as it is perhaps capable of receiving.

THE NATURE OF THE BOND (PĀṢAM); OR, THE IMPURITY OF DARKNESS¹.

The author has spoken of the LORD and of the FLOCK (NOTE XII), and here he speaks of the BOND, which is threefold: darkness, deeds, and delusion. But especially he speaks of ĀṆAVAM, the first of these: ignorance assuming a concrete form.

The Disciple asks:

What is the sorrow that clings to the soul?

XXI.

The Guru answers:

That which denies the grievous round of unceasing embodiment and bliss, and means of help, is ever existent, though ever hidden.

Commentary. There is an eternally clinging impurity of darkness (ĀṆAVA-MALAM) that conceals all that the soul should know in regard to afflictions from birth, the joys of release, and the help the Lord imparts.

Summary. In this and the following couplet (1) the reality of ĀṆAVAM and (2) its bewildering power are shown.

Unto what may this ĀṆAVAM-impurity be likened?

XXII.

Nothing except DARKNESS while showing itself, hides all else, so as to make them one with itself.

¹ The Tamil name Aviṣṣai (Sans. A + VIDYĀ) is used as a synonym of ĀṆAVAM. It is also called 'darkness,' iruḷ, for which aruḷ (= grace) is the remedy. Comp. Bhagavad-Gītā.

Com. Darkness, and it alone, has the power to manifest itself, hiding things so that their distinctive differences shall not appear. ĀṆAVAM hides birth and death, the way of release, and the means of deliverance.

Sum. The bewildering effect of ĀṆAVAM.

Is it in all things the analogue of darkness?

XXIII.

Darkness hides objects of vision, but shows itself;

ĀṆAVAM hiding all else, itself also remains concealed.

Com. Darkness in the phenomenal world, though it wraps all things in concealment, is itself clearly perceived. This mental darkness conceals both divine knowledge and its own presence in the soul. [See ĀṆAVAM (p. 100), I. 8.]

Sum. The spiritual darkness of ĀṆAVAM is more cruel in its effect than ordinary darkness.

Does this power which conceals, and itself lies concealed, affect the Lord?

XXIV.

This darkness exists from eternal ages, permeating the soul, together with the inner light, and abides till now.

Com. From eternity the darkness of ĀṆAVAM co-exists in the soul, with the inner light of divine mystic wisdom. It spreads not indeed over the divine Essence, but dwells persistent in the soul, and obscures it even until now.

Sum. ĀṆAVAM is from infinite ages, and does not pass out of the soul like 'deeds' and 'delusion.' (NOTE III, and p. li.)

Is this ĀṆAVAM really unknown to the souls it enshrouds?

XXV.

'My Lady Darkness' has an infinity of lovers, but hides herself from even her spouse with strictest chaste reserve!

Com. Though this 'darkness' pervades and interpenetrates all souls, yet to the soul in which it dwells the 'energy of ignorance' reveals not herself.

Sum. This teaches the mysterious power of ĀṆAVAM.

[ĀṆAVAM is one, though pervading an infinity of souls. (Ā. U., pp. 99, 159.) There is a personification here, as in the next. In Tiruvāṇṇam IV. 43-45:

'Soon as I thought of that Being, free from hate, unique,
Delusive powers in ever-changing millions swarmed,
And straight began their ever-varying, delusive play.'

In Māṇḍikā-Vāṇṇagar's days the theory of ĀṆAVAM had not been fully worked out.]

How can one know this ĀṆAVAM?

XXVI.

No need of many words! This ignorance of all that souls should know is the gift of the 'sons of darkness.'

Com. What good can come from using many words? The condition that is ignorant of the difference between temporal and eternal things must be caused by the powers of black darkness. ĀṆAVAM is the parent of innumerable active energies of unwisdom.

Sum. This root-impurity is the cause of a mighty power of darkness, and so is known by its effects.

If any one deny the existence of ĀṆAVAM¹, what is your reply?

XXVII.

If there be no darkness, why sorrow? If it be nothing but soul's essence it departs not; or, when it departs the soul must perish too.

Com. If you deny the concrete existence of this darkness of ignorance, why was the soul subjected to this sorrow of embodiment, which is the source of the life of sense? If you say that it is merely the natural condition of the soul, then if divine mystic wisdom be given, this ignorance departing, the soul will itself cease to be. (Cleansing would mean destruction!)

Sum. A refutation of those who deny the existence of a specific impurity to which the name of ĀṆAVAM is given.

If one say, 'ĀṆAVAM came incidentally in the course of developement,' what reply is there?

XXVIII.

If this impurity had a beginning, how explain its appearance?
and may it not silently reappear even in the realm of release?

Com. If ĀṆAVAM has sprung up incidentally, there must be some cause for its appearance, as there is for a stain on a white garment, or for a tarnish on the surface of a mirror; nor in that case can there be any absolute and final deliverance for the soul, for ĀṆAVAM may again spontaneously appear. [The crucial question of the origin of evil.]

Sum. A refutation of those who teach that ĀṆAVAM has had a beginning.

If it be from eternity, surely it never will depart?

XXIX.

Though darkness grow and spread, light will disperse it.
If not, it never can leave the mind.

Com. Material light ever dissipates the darkness that admits it; if it were not so, perpetual darkness would brood over all things. Even thus, if ĀṆAVAM yield not to the successive operations of grace, ignorance can never be dispersed. If ĀṆAVAM yield not to successive impartations of grace², the office of the guru is useless. But this office does rid the soul of it. The soul must have a faculty of receiving effectual grace.

Sum. The means of deliverance from ĀṆAVAM.

How would you answer a person who deemed that primal delusion, and not ĀṆAVAM, concealed things?

XXX.

Like a light that illuminates till the dayspring arise,
'delusion' takes form, and associates itself with deeds.

Com. Till divine mystic wisdom is imparted by Çivan, and so the darkness of ĀṆAVAM is dissipated, 'delusion' (Tirōtham) appears, and, for the sake of deeds which have to be consumed, is the cause of the phenomenal universe. Even so is it when one lights a lamp, and awaits the dawning of the day! [NOTE V. (5).]

Sum. Here 'delusion' and deeds in their relation to ĀṆAVAM are explained³.

³ The use of the word Aṇu (अणु, Sans. Aṇu) by the Çaivites.—The word Āṇavam (from Aṇu) signifies 'the state or character of the Atom.' As far as can be ascertained the word Aṇu, which has the meaning of 'soul,' is not used in any such connection in Sanskrit, or in earlier Tamil. In searching for its history I have found it used in a striking manner in the Jain system. It may be remarked that probably the best account of the Jains can be gathered from four Tamil books, and these are the 'Jivaga Chintāmaṇi,' the 'Çilapp-athigāram,' the 'Maṇi-Mēgalai,' and the 'Çiva-Āṇa-çiddhiyār.' From these we learn that the Jains (or, at least, the division of them called Ajivagar, or Çuvēṭhanar) held that the whole universe consists of five species of atoms (அணு): Earth, Fire, Water, Air, and Soul. It must be noted that the same word is used for life, breath, soul, and spirit. This word Uyir (உயிர்) is also used for Ānma, a corruption of Ātman. These five species of atoms are eternal, uncreated, indestructible, indiscerptible, and incapable of mixing with one another, though combining in every variety of substance in the phenomenal universe. They are invisible save to the eyes of divine beings 'dwelling within the circle bounded by the golden walls,'—the home of spirits made perfect. As these atoms combine without direction or control, they form bodies, into which the soul, itself an atom, passes. Thus every soul having an eternal burthen of deeds which have to be consumed, expiated, and so annihilated, enters the body thus provided for it by a blind, resistless, and utterly inexplicable fate. This part of the doctrine seems somewhat to correspond with that of the Çaiṇa Siddhānta; but, again, the Jains speak of the colours of atoms, which are pure white, red, golden, green, blue, and ordinary white. These six colours belong to the four elements of earth, water, fire, and air. As the body is compounded of these in various proportions, the indwelling soul has innate qualities or dispositions symbolized by these colours. The pure and absolute white when gained at last, entitles the soul to liberation and conclusive blessedness. Thus the soul is dependent for its condition and character upon a fate which started it with a burthen of 'deeds' good or bad, and varying in every case; and also upon its environment, which is the necessary irresistible influence of its constituent atoms.

There is a further doctrine, as in the other systems, of virtue and vice, and in this it does not differ essentially from the Siddhāntam.

THE METRES EMPLOYED IN THE TIRUVĀÇAGAM.

On the subject of Tamil metres the student may consult my Second Catechism of Tamil Grammar (Oxford), or the Third Grammar [G., Madras, 1859] with the references there to the Yāpparuṅgalam.

There are fourteen varieties of metre in this collection of sacred verse, falling under four heads: Venbā, Kali-pā, Āçiriyam, and Viruttam.

I. The VENBĀ pieces [G. 185, Pope's Nālaḍiyār, Introduction, pp. xxvi-xxxvi] are 19, 47, 48, including twenty-eight quatrains, all சேர் இசை வெண்பா. [G. 189.]

II. KALI-PĀ, of which we have seven variations.

These are poems in which the metrical feet have (generally) the connection peculiar to the Venbā; though the metre is Kali-pā, which is said to have a quick, 'leaping' rhythm (துள்ளல் இசை), and consists of any feet; but chiefly, of வெண்சீர் (— — —, — — —, — — — — —, — — — — —) [G. 175], with கவினம் and சுருவினம் (— — —, — — — — —).

(i) The first poem is in this KALI-VENBĀ metre (pp. 1-7). It has ninety-four lines of four feet, and a final of three feet, like the second line of a Kurraḷ [Pope's Kurraḷ, Introduction, p. xxv]; with initial rhyme and assonance. [G. 181-183.]

(ii) Of those really belonging to Kali-pā, 5 (ii), 10-13, 15, 31, and 38-40 (in all thirteen) are called KOÇÇAGA-KALI-PĀ, and are in verses of four lines each.

Beside these, 7, 8, and 16 are really the same; but consist of stanzas of eight or six lines. See p. 48.

These are called Taravu (தரவு), which means 'nape of the neck': they are, in fact, 'recitatives,' and are very sonorous.

In 5 (ii) we find almost exclusively 'காய் feet.' This might be called Epichoriambic. The connection is sometimes கலித்தனை, where a காய் is followed by a நிறை; or வெண்டனை, where a காய் is followed by a சேர். Comp. 51, where the metre, however, is Viruttam.

(iii) KALI-TĀṚIÇAI.

Of this, 14 is the only example. It has nineteen stanzas of three lines each. The first line has four feet, and the others three.

This is not quite regular. Tāṛiçai (தாழ் இசை) = 'cadence'; and indicates a kind of choral ode following the Taravu.

(iv) Under கலிப்பா must come 5 (ix), which is said to be கலி நிலைத் துறை. It has four lines of five feet each, of which the formula is மா	மா	காய்	மா	காய் or வி or மா

But some lines have an additional foot.

This is a kind of Viruttam. When compared with the following, கட்டளைக் கவித் துறை, its inferiority is striking.

(v) கட்டளைக் கவித் துறை. [G. 192.]

This is a more artificial form of the above, and is very popular.

Its rule (கட்டளை) is fivefold :

- (1) Each stanza must have four lines, of five feet each, under one rhyme.
- (2) The sequence is Veṇ-ḍalai : மா முன் நிறை, வினம் முன் கேர், காய் முன் கேர். [K., Introduction, p. xxvii.]
- (3) The first four feet of each line are (இயற்சீர்) — —, — — —, — — — —, — — —, with an occasional காய்.
- (4) The fifth foot must be — — — —, or — — — — —.
- (5) The stanza always ends with ஏ.

5 (i), 6, and 36 are in this metre.

(vi) Here comes in the AMMANAI, 8.

The only irregularity is that the sequence is not always maintained between the last syllable of a line and the first syllable of the next line. Comp. stanza 18.

(vii) Poem 24 is said to be of 'mixed metre': கலவை. It is mainly of the கவி rhythm, the fourth line in each stanza being very musical.

III. ĀḤIRIYAM, or 'aphoristic,' metre, of which we find here three varieties.

(i) Poems 2, 3, and 4 are in this measure, which from its use in grammars and didactic works gets its name of 'the master's metre' (ஆசிரிய = Ācārya).

It is the original Tamil representative of the Sanskrit Śloka.

It is also called Agaval (அகவல் = the call, or the peculiar strut of the pea-fowl). [G. 191, and references.]

Its sequence (சரி) is antispastic, i.e. Nēr follows Nēr, and Nirai follows Nirai: thus—

தில்லை	முதூர்	ஆடிய	திரு அடி
[தேமா	தேமா	கூவினம்	கருவினம்
— —	— —	— — —	— — — —]

This jerky rhythm is called the Agaval-ōḥai.

(ii) நிலைமண்டல ஆசிரியப் பா (=aphoristic verse of unvarying recurrence).

This is a subdivision of the Āḥiriyam. The 146 lines of poem 2, and the 225 lines of 4, furnish good normal specimens. Observe—

- (1) The lines are all of four feet (அனஹி).
- (2) The feet are mostly of two metrical syllables (இயற்சீர்), i.e. — —, — — —, — — — —, — — —.
- (3) The connection (சரி) is not always strictly that of the Āḥiriyam.
- (4) They are rhymed in couplets.

(iii) இணைக் குறள் ஆசிரியப் பா (=Āḥiriyam, where lines of two feet are interspersed).

Poem 3 is in this metre, and differs from 2 and 4 in only two respects: (1) some lines have two feet, and others three feet; (2) rhymes are irregular, or wanting altogether.

IV. VIRUTTAM (=round); thirty-one hymns.

The three metres hitherto considered mainly depend on sequence, connection of feet (சொல்), and rhythm in the individual lines; but Viruttam arranges them in rhymed stanzas, mostly quatrains, in which each line must harmonize with the rest, and fall into a kind of tune, often kept up for many stanzas, or a whole piece. This is more like Alcaic and Horatian metres.

Its law is: if a foot in one line end in ம், வினம், காய், or கனி, the corresponding feet in the other lines must end in the same.

- (1) The stanzas may be of four feet, and then the metre is called Kali-viruttam. See 5 (v), 17, 34, 46, and 51.

5 (v) reads very harsh.

Its formula is ம், வி, வி, வி. But the final வி = - - - , or - - - - .

- (2) If of five feet, it is treated here as கவிப்பம், iv.

- (3) If of six or more feet, it is called Āçiriya-viruttam. [G. 193, and references.]

To this must be referred 5 (iv, vi, vii), 9, 18, 20, 21, 25, 35, 41, 42, 43, 45, 49, 50.

- (4) Of seven feet are 5 (viii), 22, 28, 29, 30, 34, 37, 44.

- (5) Of eight feet are 5 (iii, x), 23.

Each variety has its time-measure. [G. 16.]

NOTES ON INDIVIDUAL VIRUTTAM LYRICS.

9 (pp. 128-138).

This is Āçiriya-viruttam of six feet. Formula: வி, வி, காய் (twice). Great license is used. A woman's song.

5 (iv), 41.

These are Āçiriya-viruttam [G. 193] of six feet.

The formula is ம், வி, வி, வி, வி, காய்.

They have thus twenty-six measures [G. 16], or thirteen metrical Çir (சீர்). Caesura and Mōnai before fifth foot.

☞ We might read as Dactylic pentameter hypercatalectic, with anacrusis:

- - | - - - - - - - - - - | - - - - - - - - | -
 - - | - - - - - - - - - - | - - - - - - - - | -

There are frequent resolutions of - into - - .

5 (vi), 21, 32, 33, 45, 50.

These are Āçiriya-viruttam of six feet, divided into two equal parts, of which the formula is ம், ம், காய் (twice), having twenty-eight measures.

20.

Each stanza has four rhymed lines of eight feet; but these really make eight equal lines, the alternate ones having only 'alliteration' (மோனை).

The formula of these is வி, வி, வி, மா. It is singularly pleasing.

Note that the third and fourth foot generally form an antispast :

ஆகிய பொருளே !
- - - - -

23, 5 (iii, x).

Āçiriya-viruttam of eight feet.

In 23 we have மா, வி, வி, மா (twice), in both half-lines generally; but the fourth foot is sometimes a காய், and there are minor irregularities.

In 5 (iii) the measure is காய், காய், மா, மா (twice), giving twenty மாத்திரை. [G. 16.]

In 5 (x) we find மா, வி, மா, வி (twice), or sixteen மாத்திரை.

It may be read as two Trochaic penthemimers :

⏏ - ⏏ ⏏ | ⏏ - ⏏ ⏏ |
மாறிலாதமா | கருணை வெள்ளமே !

17.

This has two formulas,—for one and three of each stanza it is மா, வி, வி, வி; but for two and four மா, வி, மா, மா. It is very much like doggerel.

34.

This at first sight seems capable of varied scansion, but (with the usual license) reads—

கனி | கனி | கனி | மா
- - - - | - - - - | - - - - | - - - -

46 is

வி | காய் { மா
 காய் | காய்
 வி

It has a pleasant mingling of the செப்பல் and தூங்கல். [K., Introduction, p. xxvii, § vii.]

51 is made up of காய் feet (- - -, - - - -, - - - - -).

The Traditional History of Umāpathi Čivāčāriyar (see NOTE VII).—‘Umāpathi (= Lord of Umai, Čivan) Čivāčāriyar was of the Tillai-vāṇthanaṇ tribe of Brahmans, and was from his earliest youth carefully instructed in the Vēdas, Āgamams, and other Čaiva scriptures. He lived in the discharge of all the duties of his caste and class, universally respected by his fellow-townsmen. One day he went as a Guru in his palanquin with the ensigns of his dignity to Tiru-Kalañ-Čēri.

‘Now at that time there lived a Guru at Tiru-Kalañ-Čēri, whose name was Marrai Nānačambandha Čivāčāriyar, a disciple of Aruṇanthi of Tiru-peṇṇāgaḍam, a Brahman who was commonly known by the name of Čagalāgama-panḍithar (= Learned in all the Āgamams).

‘This Marrai Nānačambandha Čivāčāriyar, seeing him pass by, said, “There goes a man blind in the daylight.” Now, being mature in grace and ripe for emancipation (NOTE III), the instant he heard these words, Umāpathi descended from his palanquin, fell at the sacred teacher’s feet, and adored him with “eightfold” and “fivefold” prostrations. At the Guru’s meal Umāpathi was present, and when some rice fell to the ground as he was eating, took it up and ate it. He then received from his new Guru the mystic teaching necessary to his final emancipation. When he returned to his people they expelled him for his violation of caste propriety in eating the remnants of his Guru’s food, and he was compelled to remove to Kottavan-kuḍi, where eventually he was in death made perfect.’

It is said that he composed a commentary in Sanskrit on the Boudgara Āgamam, and in Tamil¹ he wrote (1) Čiva-Piragācam, (2) Tiru-arupayan, (3) Vinā-veṇbā, (4) Pōṭṭi-paḥṇṇodai, (5) Koḍi-Kavi, (6) Neṣṭu-viḍu-tūthu, (7) Uṇmai-nerri-viḷakkam, and (8) Čaṇkar-panirāgarāṇam (p. 33). These all explain and defend the tenets of the Čaiva Siddhānta, and I have used them all in these notes. Palm-leaf copies made in Ceylon are in the Bodleian, and they have been printed in Madras by Čanmuga-Čunthara-Muthaliyar and others.

From a date given in Umāpathi’s works we learn that he was in the height of his activity in A. D. 1313. We also find that Mādhava Āchārya, the author of the Sarva-darśana-saṅgraha, was elected in A. D. 1331 as head of the Math of Śrīrāgēri in Mysore. It seems evident then that Mādhava’s account of the Čaiva system was not the result of a study of the finished writings of the Siddhānta School. In fact, very little can be learnt about our especial subject from Mādhava’s writings. The more we examine the details of the system the more thoroughly convinced do we become that the Siddhānta is indeed an eclectic system thought out by Tamil sages, from hints contained in Sanskrit works, and owes its completeness to the ingenuity of the Tamil mind. It is the Tamil answer to Buddhist, Jain, and Pantheist. Umāpathi has not so wide a reputation as Saṅkara Āchārya, or Mādhava, because he taught in the vernacular.

Ç. P. = Çiva-Piragāçam, by Umāpathi Çivāçāriyar [1872]. NOTE III. Often printed.

The following is the author's preface :—

The origin of this treatise, called Çiva-Piragāçam, is as follows :—

Çri-kaṇḍa-Paramēçuran, the absolute Lord, graciously imparted the true doctrine of PATHI, PAÇU, and PĀÇAM, which constitutes the ñāna-kāṇḍam of the Çaiva Āgamams, the 'original scripture' proceeding from Himself, to Nanthi (Dēvar), who graciously imparted to Çanat-kumāra and other sages (Rishis) the substance of that teaching in twelve standard books called the Çiva-ñāna-bōdham. Çanat-kumāra transmitted it to the Çattiya-ñānatarisinis; these to Parañjōthi Māmuni; he to Mey-kaṇḍa-dēvar, whose sacred dwelling was in (Tiru) Veṇṇey-Nallūr. This last compressed the doctrine of the twelve volumes into twelve Çūtrams, making a 'secondary scripture,' to which he gave the name of Çiva-ñāna-bōdham, and committed it to Arunanthi (Dēvar). He examined it, and since the work was much compressed and the meaning profound, expanded it and made a 'secondary scripture,' to which he gave the name of Çiva-ñāna-çiddhi. Umāpathi (Dēvar) of Kottavan-kūḍi, seeing that these works were intelligible only to those of acute minds, took them both, and adding from his own stores of divine wisdom, composed this 'dependant scripture,' to which he gave the name of Çiva-Piragāçam, and which consists of 100 quatrains of the Viruttam metre, divided into two parts, consisting of fifty quatrains each, and called respectively 'general doctrine' and 'reality.'

The Çivāgamam is the 'original work' (முதலாசனம்); Çiva-ñāna-bōdham and Çiva-ñāna-çiddhi are the 'secondary authorities' (புதுநூல்கள்); and this Çiva-Piragāçam is a 'supplementary treatise' (சுருதிநூல், புதுநூல்). See Nannūl, 6-8.

P. P. = Periya Purāṇam, 'the great legend.' This is published in verse with commentary [1885]. There is a prose summary by Ārumuga-Nāvalār [1881].

Çekkirār and the Periya Purāṇam, or 'Great Legendary History.'—About the end of the eleventh century, it would seem, arose a Tamil poet whose influence throughout South India has been very great, and is probably increasing. He came from the village of Kundratūr ('hill-town'), and was called Aruḷ-moṇi-dēvar, 'He of the Gracious Word.' His brother was called Pāl-arṛā-vāyar, 'He from whose mouth milk ever flows.' These may have been epithets afterwards given, but the name of Çekkirār, which was originally that of the tribe (a subdivision of the Vellālar, or Yeomen), was given to the poet as being pre-eminently the glory of his race. The Çōḷa king of that day was called Anapāyar ('the Imperishable,' an epithet of Çivan), whose date is between A. D. 1063 and 1112, and is said to have been greatly addicted to the study of Jain literature, and especially of their great epic, the Jivaga Chintāmaṇi, an account of which is given elsewhere. There were many good reasons against this heretical study, but the chief one urged was that its teachings were opposed to the Çaiva faith. The Çekkirār, who for his learning and piety had been made prime minister of the kingdom, a position greatly affected in old times by Çaiva devotees, reproved his master for these heretical studies. The king answered, 'But where are the lives of your Çaiva Saints? Give them to me, that I may obtain pleasure and edification from their perusal.' To this the minister replied, that Sundara Mūrti had summed up, in eleven poems, the history of the Çaiva devotees, and that Nambi-aṇḍār-Nambi had amplified this work in verse¹. These works were brought to the king, who read them with delight, but found them all too brief. He therefore requested his minister, the Çekkirār, to compose a poem that should be a great epic like the Jivaga Chintāmaṇi, and should make these histories popular through all the Tamil-speaking lands. Çekkirār undertook the task, and at once proceeded to Çithambaram, the Çivan metropolis, where, after bathing in the sacred tank, and performing all holy rites, he presented himself before the God, Who there ever performs the mystic dance that symbolizes His five divine operations. There worshipping he made his prayer for inspiration to perform the assigned task. In response a voice was heard from the shrine which uttered the line—

‘He who is hard to be understood and expressed in words.’

This both the poet and the three thousand devotees of the temple heard, and understood that the God sanctioned the undertaking and commanded that the poem should commence with this line.

The bard now set himself to collect from every quarter, arrange, and versify the legends, while the impatient king continually sent messengers to inquire as to the progress of the work and to urge it on. At length the poem was completed, and the king himself, learning that the great poem, whose initial line the God Himself had vouchsafed to dictate, was completed, came to the sacred place, and bowed in reverence before his poet-laureate and minister. And now epistles were dispatched to all parts of the Tamil country, to the devotees of the God of every order, who came thronging in until the city was crowded with sages and ascetics. In the Golden Hall—the Ponnambalam—a seat was placed for the bard, and with royal pomp the finished poem was placed upon a pedestal, while flowers were scattered around and incense offered. So the first reading began on the sixth of the month Çittirai (April), and continued day by day till the same time of the following year, while in the interval, all the auditors from every region were daily feasted by the bounty of the king. After the reading was completed, the book was wrapped up in a silken covering fringed with gold, then deposited in a golden casket, and with the bard placed in the howdah of a royal elephant, where the king stationed himself with a fan to cool the distinguished compiler; and thus in royal pomp they returned to the royal abode. The king then assigned to the poet the Toṇḍai land² as a kingdom, which, with his brother, he governed for some time, and then returning to the presence of the God, in due time obtained his final release.

The collection of legends which this poet has thus versified consists of seventy-two cantos, in which the lives of sixty-three devotees of Çivan are given, with every species of embellishment. It would seem that the Çaiva gurus had come to the conclusion that they could not retain their hold upon the people without something that should be equivalent to the Jātakas current among both Buddhists and Jains, and probably beginning then to be used by the Vaishnavites also. It is curious that the same species of legendary history was commencing at that very time to play a very great part in the religion of the Western peoples. About this period, the Nestorian Christians on the Western Coast of South India were in full force, and though their teaching would seem to have been very corrupt, and a great deal of Hinduism, Buddhism, and Muhammadanism was mingled with their Christianity, they still possessed and valued and vaunted their own legends together with and above the sacred authentic Christian history.

Our poet and the devotees at Çithambaram, who seem to have formed an Editorial Committee, had abundant sources of inspiration. Every village throughout the Tamil lands was made to give up its traditions, and additional matter was sought for in all directions. The result is a very remarkable and composite Hagiography.

TRANSLITERATION OF TAMIL WORDS, AND THEIR PRONUNCIATION.

IN attempting to write Tamil words in Roman characters many difficulties arise. The following hints are intended

(1) to enable the student to write Tamil in English letters on a uniform and scientific system ;

(2) to show how to reproduce these words in Tamil characters ; and

(3) to guide the student into something like an Oriental enunciation of words.

I. The Tamil vowels are twelve in number, to be pronounced as in Italian.

அ	= a as in America ;
ஈ	= ā as in fāther ;
இ	= i as in pīn ;
ஊ (ஈ)	= ī as in pīque ;
உ	= u as in bull ;
ஊ	= ū as in rūle ;
எ	= e as in end ;
ஏ	= ē as in thēy ;
ஓ	= o as in opinion ;
ஔ	= ō as in ōpium ;
ஐ	= ai as in aisle or maid (two sounds) ;
ஔ	= au, or ow in fowl .

II. Tamil consonants are eighteen in number.

1. க = k, g (kh, gh, h). [Guttural.] The following rules must be observed :—

(a) க initial, mute or doubled, = k.

(b) க single, not initial, = g.

(c) In Sanskrit words க often stands for kh, gh or h : these letters having no separate sign in Tamil.

2. ச = ç (s, ś), ch. [Palatal-dental.]

(a) This is a very soft palatal, not a sibilant. Tamil people—the pure, old, unsophisticated, unorganized Dravidians—could pronounce neither a sibilant nor an aspirate. They simply omitted these, or for s used ç (ச), or substituted the soft palatal ச, which is c with a soft s sound in it : the French ç.

(b) When doubled, or following ஞ and ள, it = ch.

(c) After ஜ it = j.

3. $\dot{L} = d$. [Cerebral.]

(a) This is a d stopped as far back on the palate as possible. The dot under marks its very hard sound.

(b) When doubled ($\dot{L}\dot{L}$) it = tt , a doublet pronounced in the same way.

4. $\dot{t} = t$, th (d , dh). [Dental.]

(a) This is a soft dental t when initial.

(b) When doubled, or in the body of a word, it = th as in this—FLAT; never sharp as in thin!

5. $\dot{p} = p$, b (ph , bh , f). [Labial.]

(a) \dot{p} initial, mute or doubled is hard, = p .

(b) \dot{p} single, not initial, = b .

(c) In Sanskrit and foreign words \dot{p} may stand for ph , bh , v , f .

6. \dot{m} , \dot{n} , $\dot{ñ$, $\dot{ṇ}$, \dot{s} = m , n , $ṁ$, $ṇ$, $ṣ$. [Nasal.] As these belong to the above five classes respectively they may be distinguished thus:—

\dot{m} or n guttural = m ,

\dot{n} or n palatal = n ,

$\dot{ñ}$ or n cerebral = $ṁ$,

$\dot{ṇ}$ and \dot{s} are really the same in use as the English n .

7. $\dot{m} = m$,
 $\dot{n} = n$,
 $\dot{ṇ} = v$, } as in English.

8. \dot{r} , $\dot{ṛ}$, $\dot{ṛ}$ = r , rr (r), r . These are three r sounds,—dental, palatal, and cerebral respectively.

9. \dot{l} and $\dot{ḷ}$ = l , l . See 3. (a).

10. $\dot{ḷ}$ is used for ll , when the l sound is strong. It may be distinguished, when necessary, by a line under (\dot{ll}).

It would be of great advantage if all Tamil scholars could agree to use, consistently and always, one uniform distinctive system of transliteration for Tamil words.

In printing the Tamil text I have ventured to use occasionally an apostrophe to indicate the disappearance of a letter according to Tamil rules. [G. 20.] Thus, சித்தையுணர்ந்த. Here $\dot{ṇ}$ in $\dot{u}\dot{ṇ}$, and \dot{s} in $\dot{n}\dot{s}$, have disappeared, $\dot{ṇ}$ taking their place, and ' gives warning to the reader of an elision.

எனக்க இல்லை or } Here \dot{u} is cut off.
எனக்க' இல்லை.

This is an experiment.

TIRUVĀḢAGAM

OR

THE SACRED UTTERANCE.

HYMN I.

ÇIVAN'S WAYS OF OLD; OR, ÇIVAN'S COURSE FROM EVERLASTING.

This has always been considered the first of Māṇikka-Vāḡagar's poems, and it has all the characteristics of a preface, as enumerated in the Nannūl; but its very technical completeness makes its genuineness doubtful; and it rather appears to have been added by the Tillai assembly when the lyrics of the Saint were first collected. In the Vāthavūrar Purāṇam (V. 11) it is said that after the divine Master had returned to Kailācam, the Sage with the 999 devotees remained under the Kurunthu tree at Perun-turrai, where the God had first appeared to him; erected a shrine there, and spent his time in adoration and praise, until his fellow-worshippers passed through the fire to Çivan, leaving him alone. To this, the first period of his religious history, the following three poems belong; and also, according to tradition, lyrics 19, 20, 23-29, 32-34, 36, 38, 39, 41-48, and perhaps a few others.

Here all the Tamil lines are of four feet, except the last, which has three only. The connection is Veṇ-ḡalai (Pope's Kurraḡ, Introd., p. xxvii; Nāḡaḡi, p. xxvi, &c.). The metre is Veṇ-kali-pā.

§ Salutations.

Hail, the five letters! Hail, foot of the Lord!

Hail, foot of Him Who not for an instant quits my heart!

Hail, foot of the Guru-pearl that rules in Gōḡaṇi!

Hail, foot of Him Who becomes, abides, draws near as the Āgamam!

Hail, foot of Him, the One, the Not-One, and the King!

1. Na-ma-çi-vā-ya. This is the mystic formula of five letters (or five syllables, as we should say) = 'Salutation to Çivan.' V. 245-248. NOTE II. 3. திருவாவடுறை: Tiru-vāvaḡu-turrai.

4. These are said to be twenty-eight in number, and to contain the elements of Çaivism.

Victory to the foot of the King, who soothed my soul's unrest, and made me His!
 Victory to the jewelled feet of Piññagan, who severs continuity of birth !
 Victory to the flower-foot of Him Who is far from those without !
 Victory to the anklets of the King, rejoicing 'mid those that fold adoring hands!
 Victory to the anklets of the glorious One, who uplifts those that bow the head!
 Praise to the foot of Içan ! Praise to my Father's foot ! 11
 Praise to the foot of the Teacher ! Praise to Çivan's roseate foot !
 Praise to the foot of the Stainless, who in love stood near !
 Praise to the foot of the King, who cuts off delusive birth !
 Praise to the foot of glorious Perun-turrai's God ! 15
 Praise to the Mount, in grace affording pleasures that cloy not !

§ Introduction.

Because He, Çivan, within my thought abides,
 By His grace alone, bowing before His feet,
 With joyous thought, Çivan's ' Ways of Old ' I'll tell,
 That thus my former ' deeds ' may wholly pass. 20

Thou binding with rare cords of virtue and of sin,
Didst clothe with outer skin, enveloping with worms and filth,—
Within my nine-gated dwelling foul bewildered,
By the five senses sore deceived,— 55
To me, mean as I was, with no good thing, Thou didst grant grace,
That I, with mind erewhile embruted,—pure one!—should Become commingling love, in soul-subduing rapture melt!
Thou cam'st in grace on this same earth, didst show Thy mighty feet
To me who lay mere slave,—meaner than any dog,— 60

ÇIVAN'S FAME.

HYMN II.

THE SACRED SONG OF ÇIVAN'S RENOWNED ACTS.

Composed in Tillai (Tiru Vāthavūrar Purāṇam, V. 62).

The sacred foot that danced in Tillai's city old
Is His, Who in all varied lives has energized ;
Revealed in beauty of innumerable, varied qualities ;
In earth, in sky, and in celestial worlds.
All ordered lore hath He revealed, and He made void.
My darkness hath He driven for aye far off.
Within His servants' inmost soul that love o'erflows
He dwells,—His glory and His choice.
On great Mahēndra's biding hill
In grace He caused the uttered Āgamas appear.
He came with the good goddess,
Pleasant and gracious, mingling with men at Kallāḍam.

With her whose words are milk in the 'fivefold couch,'
 He caused sweet grace, that unfailing accumulates, to grow.
 In guise of a woodman, of her whose lips are crimson,
 He sank in the lovely expanse of the swelling breast.
 Becoming a fisherman He caught the shark.
 And he received the Āgamas, a rich spoil.
 Moreover, on Mahēndra seated, the self-same Āgamas
 From His five mouths He graciously spake forth.
 In our abode a Brāhman He became,
 And as a deathless Guru dwelt in grace.
 Assuming diverse forms, and diverse habitudes,
 As hundreds of hundreds of thousands of natures,
 Iṣan, Lord of the bull, that the world might be saved,—
 He and the Lady, His partner,—came in grace.
 Bringing horses, in the Western land,
 Right royally He rode in state.
 In fair Puttūr, town of the dart, upon the bull He rode,

Made manifest His state and glorious pomp.
In a mirror, at Puttūr of the santhal-wood,
Gave increase to the woodman armed with bow.
His form all flame, that held the 'gram-bag,'
In magic beauty exquisite, of old he showed.
He whose extent to Hari and to Brahmā was not known,
In goodness jackals into horses made,
To make him His, He of the sacred foot,
The chargers to the Pāṇḍiyan sold,
Nor deigned to take the heaped-up gold.
Our King made me His slave, and in the path of grace to keep,
Made manifest the ancient brightening ray.
Becoming a Brāhman, graciously making me His own,
He showed the magic illusion.
Coming to Madura, the city great and fair,
He became a horse's groom.
And therein too, for the female devotee
He condescended to carry earth.

 And caused the sound of His tinkling anklets to be heard.
 In Perun-turrai's blissful home, a Blessed One He dwelt,
 And guileful, in undimmed lustre hid Himself.
 In Pūvalam, beauteous, sweet and gracious,
 He sin destroyed.
 A water-booth he placed, to gain the victory,
 And graciously became an attendant who serves water.
 He came a guest to Veṅkāḍu.
 Beneath the Kurunthu tree He sat that day.
 In royal Maṅgai, in fair beauty throned,
 The eight great mystic powers in grace He gave.
 Becoming a hunter, and assuming the form He desired,
 In the forest with guile He lay hid.

Exhibiting a body, assumed at pleasure,
He bore the fitting form.
In Jackal-town well pleased in grace
He became an earthly babe.
In Pāṇḍūr He came to dwell.
In the resplendent island, in the south of Dēvūr,
He assumed kingly state.
In sacred Ārūr, famed for its honey-dripping groves,
He bestowed the gift of wisdom.
In Iḍai-maruthu, by hosts attended,
He planted His pure foot.
Assuming the nature of Ēkambam,
He became partner with his never-sundered queen.
In glory He dwelt in sacred Vāñjiyam,
And delighted in the society of her of perfumed locks.
He became an attendant bearing a mighty bow,
And assumed many various appearances.
He dwelt in a spacious home in Kaḍambūr ;

 There to Umai, whose roseate mouth is filled with sweetness,
 And to Kāñi grants the beauteous smile of His blest countenance.

138. NOTE VI. ‘Çithambaram.’ He is the supremely blessed soul of all things, and the five acts of destruction, preservation, creation, embodiment, and gracious release are his ceaseless mystic dance. Of this dance the sacred Vēdas know the excellence, but are not cognizant of its cause, its time, its place, its full intention. In the forest of Taruvanam, in the midst of the Rishis, the gods beheld it; but, because that is not the world’s centre, it trembled beneath his foot. In sacred Tillai, which is the exact centre of the universe, this dance is finally revealed.

THE NATURE AND DEVELOPEMENT OF THE UNIVERSE.

HYMN III.

This poem has an introduction of twenty-eight lines, after which the praises of Çivan are intermingled with somewhat intricate but ingenious allegories. The whole partakes of the nature of a rhapsody,—not without some sublimity,—and can be fully appreciated by those only who have studied the whole Çaiṇa system as shown in NOTES I–XVII. It is an imitation, it would seem, of the Sanskrit Çatarudriya, or Hymn to Rudra¹. Yet Çivan—the Auspicious—is imagined by the Tamil Çaiṇvites quite otherwise than by the northern and more ancient authorities. Çivan in the south is the Guru, the friend, almost the familiar companion, of His votaries, and is addressed with a mixture of awe and of simple affection that has a peculiar effect. Through all Māṇikka-Vāçagar's poems this personal relation of the God as manifested Guru to His devotees or disciples is, of course, most prominent. I am not aware of anything quite like this in the mythology of the north, though among the worshippers of Viṣṇu in His various incarnations something analogous may exist.

Here lines 1–12 are very intricate, and emphasize two thoughts: (1) that the Supreme in His greatness embraces all, and pervades the minutest things in His universe; and (2) that He is the unique Being, whose wondrous and admirable sublimity is not to be fully comprehended by any finite beings, gods or men. The two epithets are the Great One (line 6), and the Beautiful One (line 12).

The idea of lines 13–16 is peculiar to the Çaiṇa system, which teaches that there are three great processes carried on by Çivan, the Supreme, in the universe. In the beginning of each aeon He evolves the phenomenal universe, and through countless ages sustains it as the theatre of births and deaths,—of the whole drama of metempsychosis; and at the end of each aeon He destroys, or involves the phenomenal universe in its primal elements. These three processes of evolution, conservation, and involution, are commonly assigned to three deities, of whom Brahmā is the Creator, Viṣṇu the Preserver, and Çivan the Destroyer. This however was seen to give to Çivan an office apparently inferior, and certainly less gracious, than that which belongs to the other gods.

The South-Indian Çaiṇa system boldly faces this difficulty. According to it there is really but one God. He is called, among many other names, Çivan 'the Blessed One.' Viṣṇu and Brahmā and the other so-called gods are but dependant 'souls' like the rest, and at the beginning of each aeon their place and office for that aeon are assigned them by the Supreme as the result of merits accumulated. The Brahmā of the present aeon is the Demiurge or fashioner of the evolved universe: he puts it into shape, and is the mere agent of Çivan.

This system invites us to contemplate the universe at the beginning of each aeon awaiting the action of the Supreme. Existence is eternal; it is subject to what are called deluges, or overwhelming catastrophes, in which all the heavens, and all the regions of the abyss, all worlds, and all beings, are restored to their rudimental condition, after which, by the will and operation of Çivan, they resume their normal manifestations. What exists at the beginning of an aeon?

First, we have the Lord, PATHI, Çivan, Perumān. He is the First Cause of all things: the only God.

Inseparable from Himself,—dwelling in Him,—is His personified energy or ÇAKTI,—his bride,—said to be the originator, source, fountain, beginning of all emotion, action, wisdom, and grace.

Secondly, we have Souls, lives, atomic existences,—the flocks,—paṣu. These have now no embodiment, no powers, energies, or faculties,—abiding like birds sleeping in the night on the branches of some mighty tree,—hardly to be distinguished from the tree itself, save that they live. These are definite in number, and are eternal; no addition can ever be made to the number of souls that are alive in the universe, none of them can ever die. Since, as we shall see, these may gain absolute identification with Çivan-Perumān and thus be embodied no more, the number of embodied souls diminishes; but no soul ceases to exist even after obtaining release, and being taken into God. It may be, according to this system, that the time shall arrive when all embodied lives have obtained release, and then the worlds will for ever cease and Çivan be all in all. Each of these souls has its load of deeds which are stored up, and are, à parte ante, eternal; the result of which, in pleasure or in pain, each soul in some embodied form must experience. As the Çaiva system says, 'The fruit of deeds must be eaten.'

These souls, at the beginning of each aeon, crouch waiting for their embodiments. There are now no evolved worlds—no heaven, no hell, no gods, demons, men. All these have been, and shall be,—but now are not. That SOULS may be furnished with embodiments, and with worlds in which they may experience their fate, we have, thirdly, the Bond,—pāṣam, the eternal material cause of the creation. This is threefold, pure māya, impure māya, and prakṛiti, the offspring of the latter, which is undefined. These three categories PATHI, PAṢU, and PĀṢAM—which we call roughly 'GOD, THE SOUL, AND MATTER'—are the subjects expounded in the Çaiva Siddhānta philosophy. See NOTES XI, XII.

§ The Sea and the Cloud.

Lines 66-95 are well nigh untranslatable, for they contain a subtle and intricate allegory, by means of which the grace of the manifested Çivan, who is praised under the title of the 'Cloud,' is set forth. The idea is (l. 66), that the Infinite sea of rapturous supreme felicity is Çivan, but—(l. 67) as the Cloud in the monsoon season sucks up water from the sea, and rises in black masses that cover the sky, while all the phenomena of the wonderful outburst of the beneficent, but also fearful, monsoon are exhibited,—so does the Supreme manifest Himself as the Guru, the Object of love, and Giver of grace to His worshippers. In the monsoon season, lightnings flash from one end of the sky to the other, crested torrents sweep down over the hills, bearing with them uprooted plants and trees, and not unseldom huge snakes that have been disturbed from their rocky mountain hiding-places. The various kinds of 'Gloriosa' spread forth their beautiful flowers like supplicating hands, while every valley and hollow is filled with water. Meanwhile, as the heat is most intense just before the burst of the monsoon, the poet pictures a troop of thirsty antelopes, deluded by the mirage which seems to offer them refreshing streams and shade: disappointed they are left to die of thirst in the wilderness. Meanwhile the pain of the fierce heat has ceased. Down the gorges of the hills the torrent rushes, and is received into tanks prepared for it by the expectant husbandmen. These lakes are fragrant with beautiful flowers, and on their banks the maidens have kindled fires with aromatic woods, at which they dry their hair and garments after the refreshing bath. The cultivators may now sow their seed and expect a rich harvest. All this is the work of the black clouds which draw water from the sea to fertilize the earth. In these lines every particular of the description has its mystical meaning, which hardly needs illustration. The student will compare VII. 61-64.

The ancient sea of bliss superne is THAT indeed !

 While serpent bright of sensual bondage dies,— 70
 While the sore sorrow of the fervent heat hides itself,— While the all-beauteous Hibiscus shines forth,— Swelling in its wrath like our mortal pain,
 It sounds forth in mighty grace as a drum.
 While flowery kānthai stretches out supplicating hands, 75
 And the tender drops of sweet unfailing grace distil,
 While the gleaming torrent swells on every side,
 And rises to the highest banks of every lake ;—
 The 'demon-car' of the six sects
 Excites the thirst of the large-eyed antelope throng. 80
 And they with eager desire crowd to drink ;
 And faint with unquenched thirst haste hither and thither.—
 Meanwhile, the heavenly mighty stream
 Rises and rushes, crowned with bubbles of delight,
 Eddies around, dashes against the bank of our 'embodiment,' 85

72. Tōndri = Gloriosa, the 'November flower.' 79. Sects, more or less heretical, leading men astray by delusive exhibitions of seeming truth. 'Demon-car,' 'devil's chariot' is the Tamil idea of the mirage. 80. Silly souls of men.

Bright gems flash'd emerald splendour forth,—
 The lightning's play mingling with gleam of gold,— Brahmā went up to seek Thee ; Thou didst hide Thyself !
 From them who toiled with mystic scrolls didst hide Thyself !
 From those who in their homes practised virtue, Thou didst hide Thyself !
 From those who, in union with Thee, fixed their contemplative soul
 With painful effort ; Thou didst hide Thyself !
 From those who boasted to see Thee by some rare device,
 By that same device, there,—didst Thou hide Thyself !

 He formed for me a frame where grace might flow.
 And as an elephant explores sweet cane and fruits, at last

THE SACRED AGAVAL OF PRAISE.

[This seems to the translator to read more like a work of Umāpathi, than of our sage!]

HYMN IV.

THE CREATION OF THE WORLD.

HE CAUSED THE PHENOMENAL UNIVERSE TO APPEAR.

§ Lines 1-10. The Feet of Gīvan.

While the Four-faced and other heavenly dwellers rose,
 Adoring, sacred Māl, whose head with rays is crowned,
 With His two feet measured the threefold world,—
 While saints from the four quarters praised with all their sentient powers,— Eager that day Thy foot and crown to know, 5
 He then became a fierce strong boar, and rushing on Dug down through sevenfold regions, wearied cried at last:
 'Eternal Source of all, to Thee be triumphs manifold!'

This struggle is illustrated well by Umāpathi's Kōyil Purāṇam, II. 44, &c., where the strife between ritual (சீர்தம்) and devotion (சேர்தம்) is shown in a curious and (often) unedifying story. See NOTE VI. 52. In the very valuable Saṅkalpa-sirīkāraṇam (சங்கற்பசிரீகாரணம், 'refutation of heresies') by the great Umāpathi, this sectarian squabbling is illustrated. [Madras, 1873, 1897.] 53. Lest I should go astray, He laid His hand on me !

As wax before the unwearied fire

With melting soul I worshipt, wept, and bent myself,

They say : ' The tooth of elephant and woman's grasp relax not,'

So I with love, real, intermitting never,

Was pierced, as wedge driven into soft young tree.

HYMN V.

THE SACRED CENTO. RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM.

Introduction to the Sacred Cento.

This remarkable poem contains a hundred especially flowing and harmonious verses of varying metres. These are divided into ten decads, and the whole are connected by the law which requires, that the last word of each verse shall begin the following verse. The whole ten lyrics with their hundred verses are thus linked together. This arrangement, which is very common in Tamil, is called Ankūṭhi (in Sans. Ēkūvali, एकवली), which I venture to translate 'Anaphoretic verse.' This cento is intended to exhibit the progress of the soul through the successive stages of religious experience till it loses itself in the rapture of complete union with the Supreme. The general title given by one editor is equivalent to 'The varying phases of Religious Enthusiasm;' at least this is the nearest expression for it that I can find in English. The poem is supposed to have been composed in Tiru-perun-turai immediately after the departure of the Saints, for some time Māṇikka-Viṇagar's companions, who passed through fire and went home to Ćivan. From the border of the tank, where the divine conflagration, into the midst of which his companions had thrown themselves, had arisen, he returned to the Kondrai tree, where he spent a long period in solitary meditation, of which these poems are the sum. He surveys his past experiences, contemplates the work assigned him, and while he begins the series of sacred poems by which he was to establish the Ćaiva system in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen, he never ceases to complain in most touching language, that he is not permitted at once to follow his Master and brethren into the rest and glory of Paradise. This is indeed the burthen of much of his poetry.

The titles of the ten decads, into which the poem is divided, indicate in some measure the course of his thoughts and the character of his mental conflicts. There is a most pathetic alternation of rapturous and realizing devotion with coldness and apathy, and even, it seems, of temporary abandonment to gross sensuality. It is to be doubted whether the whole of these verses are of one period, and I should prefer to think that they really embody his meditations and soliloquies up to the period of his final settlement in Ćithambaram.

DECAD I.

THE COGNITION OF THE TRUE.

I.

Humble access to the new Master.

My frame before Thy fragrant foot is quivering like an opening bud;—
My hands above my head I raise;—while tears pour down, my melting soul,

The false renouncing, praises Thee;—with songs of triumph praises Thee,— Nor suffer I adoring hand to rest;—O Master, look on me! 4

II.

Self-surrender. He accepts the ascetic life.

I ask not bliss of Indra, Māl, or Ayan;—though my house and home
Be ruin'd, friendship form I none save with Thine own;—though hell's abyss
I enter, I un murmuring go, if grace divine appoint my lot;—
O King! no other god save Thee I ponder, our Transcendent Good! 8

III.

He is despised as a mad enthusiast.

Transcendent Good! Owner and Sire! Thy servant melting thinks on Thee;
In raptures meet I utter forth my fever'd soul's ecstatic joys,
Still wandering from town to town; while men cry out, 'A madman this;'
And each one speaks, with mind distraught, discordant words. O, when comes death? 12

IV.

None to be worshipped but Givan.

Erewhile was Dakshan's offering death. They ate the flesh, and poison feared!
'Our Father,' cried our friends and worshipt Him with suppliant voice.

5. In original, Puran-dura = 'town-render.' An epithet of Indra. See Muir, vol. v. p. 113, &c.
13. See the account of Dakshan's sacrifice. Comp. VIII. 85, &c.; XII. 16-20; XIII. 13-16; XIV.

What sin is this your haughty minds breathe out, ye erring penitents? 16

V.

I plead no merit,—am no real devotee.

No penance have I done, nor bowed, with hand unstinting scatt'ring flowers ;
Born all in vain,—to 'cruel deeds' a thrall,—the bliss of Çivan's heav'n
Amongst Thy loving ones, I've fail'd to gain ; see, and in grace bestow
On me, Thy slave, consummate life beneath Thy feet, Supernal Lord ! 20

VI.

Grace unfailing to the faithful.

They roam'd and cull'd choice varied flowers to lay in worship at Thy feet,
They deemed that all they sought they should obtain ; and from these loving hearts.
In mystic guile Thou hidest still, abiding not ! In grace bestow,
Love to Thy glorious foot, that I may ceaseless praise with perfect song ! 24

VII.

Çivan was an ascetic, as I am now.

Erewhile the Maker's-maker bowed, brought blooming flowers, and everywhere Sought for th' All-seeing One, nor found. Our mighty One, Who dwells beyond,

THE IMPARTATION OF DIVINE KNOWLEDGE.

XI.

A prayer for perfect love.

'Midmost of Thy devoted ones, like them in mystic dance to move;
Within Thy home above to gain wish'd entrance, lo, I eager haste!
O golden-glorious Hill of gems! Give grace, that ceaseless love to Thee,
Our Master, in my heart of hearts, melting my very soul, may 'bide. 44

XII.

Longing for grace alone.

I dread not any birth. To death what should I owe! Nor do I crave Even heaven itself to gain. No power to rule this earth do I esteem.

DECAD III.

DYING TO SENSE AND SELF.

This decad describes the mystic experience known by Āiava Siddhāntis as Nāna-ṣarīthai, in which the devotee, though able to discern God in and above and beyond all things, continues to perform outward rites (Ṣarīthai) and to avail himself of all means of grace. See Āiava-Piragāṇam II. 48. Since Āiava so deigns to manifest, and yet veil, His Presence, the devotee is assiduous in performance of all prescribed acts of worship, while his soul transcends the visible, and by Nānam (in this connection = divine Faith) sees God. Introd., p. 1, &c.

XXI.

I have relapsed into apathy.

'Through Thine expanding locks the FLOOD pours down ;
the Bull is Thine, Lord of the heavenly ones !'—
They sang, and stood, with panting, melting souls, like torrent plunging in th' abyss ! and I,
With yearning soul I heard ! Thou mad'st me Thine ! Yet now from head to foot, I melt not ;—from my eyes
The rushing waters pour not down ;—my heart is stone ;—both eyes are wood to SINFUL me !

180

180. Death slain, and brought to life again!—There is an odd little story in the Skanda Purāṇam (சுக்காண்டபுராணம்), which is capable of conveying very impressive teaching. It is as follows:—There was an ancient sage called Mṛikaṇḍa, who, having no son, offered fervent prayers to Ćivan, and performed many austerities, always praying for the gift of a worthy son. At length Ćivan appeared to him in his hermit's habitation, and promised him a son, who was, however, to be taken from him by death in his sixteenth year. The son was born, and grew up in the wilderness, a pattern of virtue, and an enthusiastic worshipper of Ćivan. But at the appointed time, the terrible Yaman, lord of dead, came and threw his noose over the doomed youth. Ćivan, who loved the devout boy, was enraged at this, and with a kick of his foot laid Yaman (the lord of death) dead on the ground. We may say, by the way, that Yaman seems to us to have been badly treated, since he was after all only doing Ćivan's will. However this may be, all the gods came round Ćivan imploring mercy for Yaman,—for, however terrible death may be, the worlds cannot get on without him. Accordingly a touch of Ćivan's foot restored the god of death to life. The poet's application of this myth is very remarkable. He says in effect: 'I am as dead in soul as Yaman was, but thy touch brings even death to life.' Comp. IX. 70; XV. 41; XXIII. 34; XXIX. 26; Kurraṭ, 269; Niti-Nerri-Viṭakkam, 51.

Thou Warrior strong from out Thy golden city cam'st, mad'st darkness flee;
With Her the beauteous Queen didst deign to come. The glorious devotees Who grace had gained, approached Thy Feet. I saw, yet like a sightless hog
That roams the village street, shall I still roam a wretch doomed to live on? 212

Hail! O Çaṅkarā, other refuge have I none!
 Hail! Partner of the Queen of glorious form, of ruddy lips,

* 256. How Gaṅgā (the Ganges) got into the tuft of hair on Çivan's head.—The ancestors of a certain king of the solar race named Bhagīrathan, owing to the curse of the ancient sage Kabilar, were consumed to ashes, and to restore them to life he obtained by severe penances the favour from the gods that the heavenly Ganges should be sent down to this world; but Çivan, fearing that the rush of the celestial flood would destroy the earth, caught the river on his head, and kept it among the twines of his braided lock,—so saved the world. The legend seems to have no possible meaning, but the most popular epithets of Çivan are founded upon it. One may fancy that the god is a personification of the Himālayas, whose tangled forests are his hair, from the midst of which, as from the very heavens, flows down the mighty Ganges, while the crescent moon gleams brightly on the mountain's brow. ‘FORSAKE ME NOT.’

HYMN VI.

This title, which forms the burthen of the poem, is given to one of the Sage's most interesting compositions. It consists of fifty quatrains, constructed in a beautiful metre (see my Second Grammar, § 192), which is in fact epichoriambic (as is explained in the notes to the Tamil text).

It is called an Anthāthi poem. This means that it is anaphoretic, the last word of a verse being repeated in the beginning of each following verse, and very often striking its key-note. (Hymn V is the same.) This has a beautiful effect in Tamil, but the difference of idiom often forbids the translator to attempt to reproduce it in English.

The poem throughout is a genuine human cry for Divine help in the midst of a terrible struggle, and is full of the most vivid emotion. It was composed, according to tradition, immediately after the wonderful cento that forms the fifth poem, and gives expression to the youthful devotee's feelings after his guru had finally departed, and the company of the 999 (?) saints who attended him had thrown themselves into the fire. He is said to have gone round the Çivan shrines in the Pāṇḍiyan kingdom, and first of all to have spent some considerable time in the ancient city of Tīru-Uttara-kōṇa-maṅgai, which was at one time a Pāṇḍiyan capital, situate eight miles south-west of Ramnad, where the ruins of an important Çivan shrine are yet to be seen. There he suffered from the reaction naturally consequent upon the excitement produced by the wonderful events of the preceding months. He had been till now the petted, highly gifted favourite and prime minister of the Pāṇḍiyan king, living in the midst of pomp and luxury, invested with almost absolute power; and was still in his early manhood. He finds himself at once a Çaiva mendicant, who has renounced everything, subsists on alms, and must spend his days and nights in solitary meditation.

Meanwhile the circumstances in which he finds himself placed, the lives of his companions, the whole environment of the temple, are not favourable to pure and high devotion. The lofty ideal is not realized here. Then, as now, the influences surrounding and emanating from the shrine itself were in many ways deteriorating. From the evidence of these verses, we conclude that there were two things from which he suffered. One of these was the allurements of the female attendants, who in bands pertained to the temple. We have noticed this elsewhere. Hindu commentators will often find mystic meanings, which are harmless,—if unfounded. Again and again in this and other poems he deplores the way in which he has been led to violate his vow. The other difficulty, often referred to, was the way in which mere ceremonial acts had to be performed, affording no relief to his conscience. He thus fell into a desponding and well-nigh despairing state of mind, and sent forth this cry, like that heard in the Psalter, and reiterated by the greatest Being that ever trod the pathway of this human life. Few things in literature have such a genuine ring as some of the verses in which the young noble bewails his apparent desertion by his Master. Yet he never quite lost his confidence and love; and afterwards, as many of the lyrics show, exchanged for the ‘spirit of heaviness the garment of praise.’

I do not think that any one can be found who will withhold his sympathy from the Sage. It may be noticed, though it is in connection with the Tamil text that the matter must be more fully discussed, that there is a great difference, as it seems to me, between the style of the first twenty stanzas, (where indeed it may be conjectured that the poem originally ended,) and those that follow. Notably in verses 21–50 there is only one reference to Uttara-kōṇa-maṅgai, which city in verses 1–20 is a part of the perpetual refrain. These later verses, too, are more ingenious and subtle, and are more full of poetic fancies. Sometimes, indeed, they may seem to be even more beautiful than those that are the undoubted composition of the Sage. Their language, rhythm, and manner seem to me, however, to be different. But I readily acknowledge the difficulty that lies in the way of all merely subjective criticism, especially by a foreigner. Yet the exceedingly uncritical way in which these texts have been hitherto handled necessitates and justifies the attempt.

The writer did a great part of these translations at beautiful Lugano, not unfrequently relieving the toil by the enjoyment of an hour in the church of S. Maria degli Angioli, before the marvellous frescoes of Bernardino Luini; and could not help wishing oftentimes that the Tamil Sage and Seeker after God could have stood there, or haply knelt by his side. Could Māṇikka-Vāṇagar have traced that history of the Great Master, of His passage from Gethsemane to the glory of His heavenly dwelling-place, how would he have been affected? One wonders! It may be that he, and the weaver of Maillapūr, and the wandering sages of the Nālaḍiyār, and others whose legends we recall, have since, freed from the flesh, visited that spot. Certainly they know those histories now! Shall we not in regard to our poet-sage, wherever his ashes are scattered, say hopefully and tenderly, Requiescat in pace?

XIV.

Like one whose tongue amid the FLOOD is parched I gain'd Thy grace, Yet sorrow springs; ME THOU'ST FORSAKEN; UTTARA-KOṢA-MAṆGAI'S KING;
Who ever dwellest in Thy servants' hearts that Thee desire!
To me in guile immersed grant grace! My joy is JOYLESS all!

56

XV.

With joyous thought I saw Thy Foot, drew near, and gained Thy grace;
Yet am not free! ME THOU'ST FORSAKEN, UTTARA-KOṢA-MAṆGAI'S KING, Whose flowery jewell'd Foot is Light of all true lights that gleam!
Father accessible! Lord, Who didst make me all Thine own!

XVI.

I wandered weary, none to say 'Fear not!' Like lightning's flash
Behold, THOU HAST FORSAKEN ME! Thou Truth beyond compare; Great UTTARA-KOṢA-MAṆGAI'S KING, that like Thyself abides;
Like Mother Thou, like Father Thou, my soul's most precious WEALTH!

THE MAIDENS' SONG OF THE DAWNING.

HYMN VII.

The mystic 'Song of the Maidens' forms a pendant to the 'Morning Hymn' (XX). It has always been attributed to Māṇikka-Vāṇagar without any hesitation, though in many respects it is certainly unlike most of his other lyrics. It is said to have been composed for the use of the women at Arupā-ṇalam, among whom it is, and was, the custom to celebrate with great demonstrations of joy a festival in honour of the god Ćivan and the goddess Ćatti in the month of Mārgaṇi, which corresponds to the second half of December and the first half of January. At that time the females of the city of all ages for ten successive days rise before dawn, and perambulate the precincts, arousing their companions from house to house, and proceeding to bathe (in rigidly decorous manner) in the sacred tank. There are passages in this poem which I have been obliged somewhat to veil, and modify, carefully preserving, however, the full and exact meaning of the original, as I conceive it. There is, however, connected with the Ćaiva worship, it must be said, a series of rites which is sometimes called the tantric, and sometimes the ṣakti system. No doubt, in connection with this, many unspeakable abominations have been, and are at times perpetrated; and every thoughtful Hindu is sincerely anxious that all trace of these corruptions should be swept away. In all nations similar things have existed, and it would be quite superfluous to enumerate the ancient rites of a similar character that have been enthusiastically celebrated. [Comp. GROTE, I. 25, 219, &c.] From such things the Ćaiva system must sever itself absolutely, which it can the more decidedly do, because they have no real root in the Ćaiva Siddhānta philosophy itself.

In one edition of these poems there is an introduction to the 'Maidens' Reveillé,' which gives a mystic interpretation to a large portion of the lyric. According to this author, from the month of Āḍi to the month of Mārgaṇi (i.e. from July 15th to January 15th) is the night season; the other half of the year being the daytime: the whole year forming a single day of the gods. The former half of the year, in which there is rain with black clouds, is the representative of the secular period of involution or destruction, when all things have been re-involved in the triple veils of darkness, which period precedes that of the re-creation, or evolution. The other half of the year represents the period of creation, i.e. the time during which the phenomenal universe is re-evolved from its eternal elements, as the sphere of the activities of all things that have life. The month of Mārgaṇi is then the symbol of the awaking of the universe from its slumber of involution. It is the dawn of the new creation,—of secular evolution. [NOTE XIII.]

Now this creation is the work of Ćatti, the manifested energy of Ćivan:—his wife, who is the author, not of life indeed, but of the whole phenomenal system in which and by which life exerts its energies, and achieves its destinies. Ćivan Himself can come into no personal relation with matter and its veiling delusions and darkness. It is, therefore, Ćatti that accomplishes the work; she is an energy of activity, of knowledge, and of desire; and through her alone the Supreme evolves all things. But this tantric system, like the gnostic systems of old, does not permit Ćatti, as the Partner of the Supreme, to accomplish directly the work of evolution. This would be far too simple and direct for Hindu philosophy. There is a long chain of feminine manifestations (aeons) evolved in succession, each coming into a relation to the Supreme that constitutes a distinct stage in the process; and it is only at last that Brahmā and Vishṇu are evolved, to be respectively the fashioner and the maintainer of the cosmic world. The writer here enumerates nine of these Ḍattis, amongst whom are numbered the chief female divinities that, under various names and epithets, are worshipped or propitiated in various parts of India. Among them is the dreaded Kālī. No doubt there are hints of all this in this poem, but its plain and obvious interpretation is the only one known to the majority of those that use it, and I imagine the composer himself was innocent of anything like the gnosticism and mysticism that his interpreters have given him credit for. As the hymn stands it is a beautiful composition, but in some parts it will seem to be somewhat obscure. I have tried to give a version that shall be as literal as possible, but only the Tamil reader can feel how great a poet its author was; and only the student of the South-Indian Ḍaiva philosophy can expect to enter into its spirit.

The Splendour rare and great, that knows nor first nor end, we sing; Thou hear'st the song, yet still sleep'st on;
O lady of the large bright eye! is thine ear dull that it perceives not sound of praise that hails
The great God's cinctured feet?—She hears the strain resound through all the street, yet in forgetful sleep
On her flower-couch she muttering turns!—
See, here she nothing noting lies! Why thus, why thus?
doth this our friend besem?—OUR LADY FAIR, ARISE!

4. The refrain is ēl embāvāy! which may mean 'Arise (or ponder), O our Lady!' but seems like Scott's elcu loro! in Marmion.

The Lady of Kārai-kāi¹.

Once on a time, 'our Perumān,' full oft cried she.
His glory any time to speak she ceased not

57. The word 'time' is Kāl, so there is a play on the word Kārai-kāi. It may be that the poet in another passage alludes to her beautiful prayer (XI, verse 8):—

'He gave me grace, tho' I all else forget, ne'er to forget
His foot, Whose mighty dance we sing!'

நீர்ஒருகால் ஓவா நெடுந்தாரை கண்பணிப்பப்,

Çaivism, and a few are anterior to both. It seems pretty certain that, while the Jains and Buddhists were active and apparently triumphant everywhere, there were a great multitude of the faithful Çaivites who, like the Covenanters in Scotland, were rendered more zealous by the persecutions to which they were exposed. Among these was the 'Mother' of Kāraikāl, who was a poetess, many of whose verses are still preserved. The legend gives a most interesting picture of some phases of South-Indian life a thousand years ago. The 'Mother' was the wife of a rich merchant of Kāraikāl¹, whose name was Paramadattan ('Endowed with heavenly gifts'). Her own name was Punithavathiyār ('The pure'). She was very devout, and especially careful to entertain all Çaiva devotees that came to her door. One day her husband received from some persons who had come to him on business a present of two mangoes, of a very superior kind, which he sent home to his wife. Soon afterwards, a holy devotee arrived at the house as a mendicant guest; but she had nothing ready to offer him except some boiled rice. This she set before him, and having no other condiment to present, gave him one of the aforesaid mangoes. At noon her husband returned, and after his meal ate the remaining mango, which pleased him so much that he said to his wife, 'There were two; bring me the other.' She went away in dismay; but remembering that the god to whose servant—because he was His servant—she had given the fruit, never deserts those who serve Him, she offered a mental prayer, and straightway found a mango in her hand, which she carried to her husband. Being a divine gift, it was of incomparable sweetness, and he said to her, 'Where did you obtain this?' She hesitated at first to reveal the wonder that had been wrought on her behalf, but reflected that she ought to have no concealments from her husband, and so told him everything. He gave no credence to her words, but roughly replied, 'If that is so, get me another like it.' She went away, and said in her heart to the god, 'If thou givest me not one more fruit, my word will be disbelieved!' Forthwith she found another fruit still more lovely in her hand. When she carried this to her husband he took it in astonishment; but behold! it forthwith vanished. Utterly confounded by these wonderful things, he came to the conclusion that his wife was a supernatural being, and resolved to separate at once from her. He revealed the matter, however, to no one, but quietly equipped a ship in which he embarked a great part of his wealth, and then on a lucky day, worshipping the god of the sea, with sailors and a skilful captain, he set sail for another country, where he made merchandise, accumulated a fortune, and after some time, re-embarking, came back to India to another city in the Pāṇḍiyan land, where he married a merchant's daughter, and lived in great luxury. A daughter was born to him, to whom he gave the name of the wife with whom he had feared to remain, but for whom he retained exceeding reverence.

After awhile his return and prosperity became known to his friends in Kāraikāl, who resolved to compel him to receive again his first wife, their kinswoman, whom he had deserted. They accordingly proceeded to his new residence, carrying with them in a litter his saintly spouse, the 'Mother' of Kāraikāl. When he heard that she had arrived and was halting in a grove outside the town, he was seized with a great dread, and proceeded with his second wife and daughter to where the 'Mother' was encamped surrounded by her kindred. He at once prostrated himself with profoundest reverence before her, saying, 'Your slave is happy here and prosperous through your benediction. To my daughter I have given your sacred name, and I constantly adore you as my tutelary goddess!' Poor Punithavathiyār, utterly confounded by this salutation and worship, took refuge among her kinsfolk, who all cried out, 'Why is the madman worshipping his own wife!' To this Paramadattan replied, 'I myself beheld her work a miracle, and I know that she is no daughter of the human race, but a supernatural being, and so I have separated myself from her, and I worship her as my tutelary divinity, and have dedicated this my daughter to her, and therefore have I worshipped her and call upon you to do the same.' But Punithavathiyār pondered the matter, and prayed within herself to Çivan the Supreme, saying: 'Lord, this is my husband's persuasion! Take from me then the beauty that I have hitherto cherished for his sake alone. Remove from me this burthen of the flesh, and give to me the form and features of one of the demon hosts who evermore attend on Thee, and praise Thee.' That very instant, by the grace of the god, her flesh dried up, and she became a demoness, one of Çivan's hosts, whom the earthly world and the heavenly world hold in reverence. Then the gods poured down a rain of flowers, heavenly minstrelsy resounded, and her relatives, fearing, paid her adoration and departed. So she had now become a demoness, and her abode was the wild jungle of Ālaṅkāḍu; but through the inspiration of the god she sang several sacred poems, which are preserved. Afterwards there came upon her an irresistible desire to behold the Sacred Hill of Kailāçam, and with inconceivable speed she fled northwards till she arrived at the foot of the Mountain, and reflecting that it was not right with her feet to tread the heavenly ascent, she threw herself down and measured the distance with her head. The goddess Umā, Çivan's bride, beheld her thus ascending, and said to her spouse, 'Who is this that in this strange fashion draws near, a gaunt fleshless skeleton, sustained only by the energy of love?' To which Çivan replied, 'She that cometh is the "Mother" devoted to my praises, and this mighty demon-form she has obtained by her prayers.' When she drew near he addressed her with words of love, calling her by the name of 'Mother,' which she for ever bears. As soon as she heard the word she fell at his feet worshipping, and ejaculating 'Father!' Çivan then said to her, 'What boon dost thou ask of me?' She worshipped and replied, 'Lord, to me your slave give love, which is undying, and infinite blessedness. I would fain be born on earth no more; but if I must be so born, grant me at least that I may never, in any form, at any time, forget Thee, my God; and when thou dost perform thy sacred mystic dance, beneath thy feet in rapture may I stand and sing thy praise.' To which the God replied, 'In Ālaṅkāḍu thou shalt see my dance, and with rapture thou shalt sing.' Then the sacred 'Mother' of Kāraikāl returned, measuring the distance still on her head to holy Ālaṅkāḍu, where she beheld the God's sacred dance, and sang her renowned lyrics in his praise.

This legend illustrates a remarkable feature in the Çaiva worship of the south, where devotees are not infrequently adored as having become demons. Doubtless, this is connected with pre-Āryan usages, and the poems attributed to the 'Mother' of Kāraikāl present the most vivid picture of demon worship with which I am acquainted. It is not difficult to imagine the source of this tradition. We have the picture of a devout and enthusiastic worshipper of Çivan, who sacrifices everything to the performance of her supposed duties to the god. She is misunderstood by her inappreciative husband, who forsakes her, and finally, with scorn, repudiates her. She has built herself a chapel in the jungle, where she spends her days and nights in prayers and austerities, and on her death is worshipped. The legends would soon accumulate, and the poems represent in dramatic form the artistic view of all the circumstances.

The Cloud¹: an Allegory.

Erewhile thou didst the sea diminish, rising like the Queen ;
 didst glisten like Her slender waist Who rules my soul ;
 Didst like the golden anklets sound that on Her sacred foot in beauty gleam ; didst bend like to Her sacred brow
 The bow. As she, mindful of those who love our King, who like herself, our Mistress, never quit His side ;
 Mindful of us too, as our Queen, pours forth sweet grace, even so pour down, O CLOUD ! OUR LADY FAIR, ARISE !

XVII.

The red-eyed one², and He Whose face turns to each point³, and gods in every heaven, taste no delight like ours.
 Thou of the fragrant locks didst make our beings pure ;
 and here in grace didst rise in every home of ours ;

¹ Here there is a subtle comparison between Çivan, Çatti, and a cloud that in the monsoon season rises from the sea. The cloud drinks the waters of the sea, gleams in the sky with lightning fires, sends forth the voice of the thunder, is sometimes made beautiful with a rainbow, and then, spreading itself over the heavens, pours down fertilising showers on all the earth below. So Çivan drank the poison from the sea ; dances in Çithambaram while His golden anklets sound ; wears a form of dazzling splendour ; is renowned for the victories He gained with His bow ; and pours forth blessings over all the earth. The comparison to Umā or Çatti is obvious. This closely resembles III. 66-94.

THE SACRED AMMĀNAI.

HYMN VIII.

RAPTUROUS JOY.

The remarks made in the introduction to VII will apply in some degree to this poem also, which is traditionally said to have been composed at the same place and time by the bard, who seeing the women in great numbers enjoying their favourite game of Ammānai and accompanying it with a simple song, listened to their words, and then put the substance into these verses. In some of them He relates his own experiences; in others he puts words into their mouths. In the play the women, generally six in number, sit in a circle and toss a number of little balls from one to another with great dexterity and very swiftly. It is a pretty sight. They accompany their game with a simple song, the rhythm of which is suited to the action of the players. In this case there are twenty verses of six lines, each verse having but a single rhyme. The subject of such verses is generally some heroic exploits, such as are popular among all classes; or the great acts of a deity. Here the title of 'rapturous joy' has been prefixed, as the editor seems to have conceived that as the main idea of the verses.

I.

His advent as Guru. The Foot.

Great Māl, the fiery-eyed, delved down, but failed to reach
His foot's expanding flower! To earth that foot came down,
Our 'birth' cut off, made those like us His own.—Lord of The south-land's clustering cocoa-groves, and Perun-turrai's shrine,
And Tillai's sacred court,—a sage He came, call'd me in grace,
And gave release. SING we His foot whence mercy flows! AMMĀNAY, SEE! 6

1-6. Here there are four leading ideas: (1) Çivan rising as the mountain Arunāçalam, passed above and below the soaring flight of Brahmā and the delvings of Viṣṇu; (2) this same Çivan has graciously manifested Himself as a GURU to the humble, loving bard in order to release him from further metempsychosis; (3) He is also worshipped in the temple of Perun-turrai, His great southern shrine, where the saint first knew Him; and (4) in the sacred court of Tillai He dwells, a Brāhman, one of the 3000 saints, the mystic Dancer and Dispenser of grace. There the sage is to obtain his consummation. These four ideas perpetually recur in these poems.

1. This is an unfailing topic treated with inexhaustible variety. See notes to XI. Nālaḍi, 373.

Manifestations.

To men on earth, to heavenly ones, to those beneath,
 To those beyond, He's scarce made known ; to us accessible !
 The Name revered, the South-king, Perun-turrai's Lord Entering our souls, with frenzy filled them, showed the final way.

 The Sea of full desire SING we ! AMMĀNAY, SEE !

III.

The initiation in Perun-turrai.

Inthiran, Māl, Ayan, all the other heavenly ones,
 Stood round in upper air ;—Çivan in grace to earth came down,
 Made those like us His own. His arm the sacred ashes shows ;

10. Lit. 'the way by which souls going return not to embodiment.' XXV. 26 ; L. 11.

11, 12. Çivan casts His net, is a fisherman. (Comp. II. 17 ; XLVIII. 9 ; XLIX. 8.) This refers to a story in the fifty-seventh of the 'sacred Sports' (Taylor's Oriental MSS., p. 103 ; Nelson's Madura Manual.) Pārvathi was one day inattentive while Çivan was expounding to her the Vēdic mysteries, for which she was condemned by her angry husband and preceptor to be born on earth as the wife of a fisherman. Accordingly one day she was discovered lying as a tender infant under a Pinnai tree (or Punnai, Calophyllum Inophyllum, see Nālaḍi Lex.), by the headman of the Paravar, a great clan of fishermen found everywhere along the coasts of the Tamil lands. By him she was adopted, and grew up a maiden of surpassing beauty. At this time Nandī the chamberlain of Çivan, in order to bring about the accomplishment of the god's purposes with regard to the banished Pārvathi, assumed the form of a monstrous shark, II. 17 ; and in various ways annoyed the poor fishermen, breaking their nets and wrecking their boats. On this the headman of the Paravars issued a proclamation that whoever should catch the sea-monster should be rewarded with the hand of his beautiful adopted daughter. Çivan forthwith made his appearance as a youth of noble aspect who had come from Madura, and at the first throw of his net caught the shark and brought it to land. He accordingly, having himself become a fisherman, received the fisherman's daughter in marriage. The god now assumed his ancient form, and restored Pārvathi to her, and with many gracious words took the foster-father with Him to Kailācam, the paradise of the Silver Hill.

17. This verse refers to the manner of the saint's initiation, and the coming of the jackal-horses to Madura under the leadership of the disguised god. 20. In Ārūr he is worshipped as Vānmiga Nāthar, or 'Lord of the anthill.' This is variously explained. See XXIII. 5, 6. Gods and saints have performed arduous penances in vain: to me He spontaneously revealed Himself. 25. 'With stony heart,' as 27.

31. This seems to refer to the story in Canto II. 44, &c. of the Kōyil Purāṇam (Madras, 1885), p. 75, which the Tamil student should read. The explanation of the native editor is ingenious, but it is useless to follow him in his disquisition. Compare the legend, NOTE VI. 39. See III.

37-42. Çivan is here praised under ten different epithets, which sum up much of the poet's creed with regard to his Master.

THE SACRED GOLD DUST.

HYMN IX.

THE MERGING OF THE SOUL IN RAPTURE.

In the Vātha-Ūrār-Purāṇam V, 63, we are told that the Sage when in Tillai saw women pounding the gold dust which, mixed with perfumes, is strewn on the heads of distinguished visitors to the shrine, and on great occasions is lavishly thrown over all things and persons connected with the worship. As they pounded, they sang foolish songs; and he composed these twenty verses, in a somewhat loose metre, to be sung in time with the pestles. The song is much admired, but is a little obscure, and almost colloquial. I have tried to preserve the rhythm,—five principal accents in each half line.

THE HUMMING-BEE.

HYMN X.

Our poet-sage, like S. Anthony of Padua, and some other mediaeval saints, had a great sympathy with the irrational creation. Comp. the Kūyil decad (XVIII), and the Parrot decad (XIX). This poem is addressed to the humming-bees, or winged beetles, which abound in all the topes and glades of South India, and are especially numerous in the shady groves that surround the temples; having a great preference for the fragrant and beautiful trees which are sacred to the Hindu deities.

The insect, here called Gōttumbi, is probably the dragon-fly, Euplaza splendens.

Here the SOUL is really addressed, and exhorted to seek Çivan's feet.

Go to His roseate foot who mounts the Bull ;

AND BREATHE HIS PRAISE, THOU HUMMING-BEE !

(2) The personified Vēdas, in Tamil called 'mysteries.' 3. Sūrya, the sun-god, the moon and Agni. The first is said to have at various times become a horse, to have ridden a horse, and to ride in a chariot drawn by seven horses. Mā may here mean (1) 'horse,' or (2) 'majesty.'

His love given to loveless me.

There was no love in me like Kaṇṇappan's ;

13. See XV. 9-12.

The Legend of Kaṇṇappa Nāyanār, or the 'Eye-Devotee.'—The image of this renowned South-Indian devotee stands in the temple at Kalahasti (Calastri) near the Pulicat hills. He was a rāja of Uduppūr, and of the Shepherd caste (a Vīḍan, or Hill-man; perhaps a Kurumban)¹. The story represents his ancient clan as possessing great wealth and authority in a wild hilly district, where their whole occupation was hunting. There is a Zamindār who lives there now in feudal state. The old chieftain, the father of Kaṇṇappa, whose name was Nāgan (the Dragon-man), is represented to us as moving about attended by fierce hunting dogs, armed with every kind of rustic weapon; a skilful archer, around whose mountain-dwelling innumerable forest animals of every kind had their home, and where the cries 'shoot'! 'hurl'! 'strike'! were mingled from morning to night with the howlings of wild beasts, the barking of dogs, and the sound of the horns and drums of the hunters. He had no son, and therefore he and his wife went to the temple of Subrahmanyan (a son of Çivan),—the favourite deity of mountaineers, and probably a pre-Āryan deity of the South, an object of worship, under many names and forms, in every Tamil hamlet. To him they offered cocks and peafowl, made great feasts with copious libations of strong drink, performed wild dances; and, in fact, according to the legend, seem to have worshipped much after the rude fashion of the demon worshippers of the present day. The result was that by the favour of their tutelary deity a son was born to them, who from his early childhood shared in his father's pursuits, being brought up, it is expressly said, like a 'tiger's cub.' The proud, happy father used to carry him about on his shoulder, but finding him one day too heavy to be thus borne, gave him the name of Tiṇṇan ('the sturdy one'), which remained his pet household name. He was erewhile to bear a more honourable and enduring title! Soon after this the old chief, finding himself unable any longer to conduct the hunting expeditions of the tribe, made over his authority to his son, with whom alone this history is concerned.

Henceforth our young hero is ever in the dense jungles with his veteran huntsmen. One day a wild boar, of gigantic size, that had been caught in their nets, escaped, and made off with prodigious speed to the mountain side. Tiṇṇan pursued it with two faithful attendants, but it led them a weary chase, and did not stop till, exhausted with fatigue, it fell down in the shade of a tree on the slope of a distant hill. There Tiṇṇan with his sword cut it in two. His attendants came up, and were astonished and delighted at his success, and said, 'We will roast the boar here, and refresh ourselves.' But there was no water at hand, so they took up the carcase of the boar and carried it some distance onward, till they came in sight of the sacred hill of 'Kālahatti.' At the view of the mountain one of the attendants cried out, that on that mountain summit there was an image of the 'God with flowing hair' (ÇIVAN). 'If we go thither we may worship him,' added he. Hearing this the young giant Tiṇṇan again shouldered the boar and strode on, exclaiming, 'with every step that I advance consumed the offering, comp. V. 13-16; but it is never expressly said that the food disappeared from before the shrines, though this is sometimes implied.] Meanwhile the sun went down, and during the whole night Tipnan with his arrow on the strung bow kept watch and ward around the god, and at dawn went forth to the mountain to hunt, that he might provide for the daily wants of his new master. While he was gone on this errand the Brāhman in charge of the lingam, who was a learned ascetic of renowned virtue and holiness, Çivagöchariyār, came at daybreak, and having performed his own ablutions in the river, provided himself with a vessel of pure water for the purification of the divine image, and a basket of sacred flowers and fresh leaves for its adornment, and uttering the mystic Five Syllables, devoutly drew near. A scene of unutterable pollution met his horrified gaze. Flesh and bones were strewed around, and the image itself had been defiled with filthy water and common wild flowers! With trembling horror he sprang aside, exclaiming, ‘Oh, god of gods! what unhallowed impious hands of mountaineers have brought these pollutions here. How didst thou permit them thus to profane thy presence?’ So saying, he wept, fell down, and rolled in anguish before the god. But, reflecting that at any rate it was wrong to delay any longer the sacred service, he carefully removed the unhallowed things from the precincts, and proceeded to perform his daily worship according to the Vēdic rites; and having sung the appointed hymn, and many times gone round the right of the image, and prostrated himself in adoration, departed to his hermitage.

Meanwhile the servants, having taken the news of Tipnan’s madness to old Nāgan, his father, returned with him and the priestess of their demon temple. They both attempted to reason with the young enthusiast, and to recall him to the worship to which he had been accustomed; but its wild orgies delighted him no more. His whole affection was centred upon the new found Çivan; so they, regarding him as hopelessly mad, returned sorrowing to their village.

[One object of this legend seems to be the reconciliation of the orthodox Çaiva worship with the ruder forms of demon worship then in use. The contrast is exceedingly striking when the refined and thoroughly instructed Brāhman, with his scrupulous attention to all the minusiae of Vēdic worship, who regarded the slaying of animals as a crime, and the eating of their flesh as an unspeakable abomination, and considered that whatever had touched a man’s mouth was polluted, and that the wild human inhabitants of the jungle were a lower order of creation, is brought face to face with the youthful chieftain of an almost savage tribe, whose chief delight is to hunt down, slay and devour the birds and beasts of the forest; who brings boar’s flesh for the unpolluted Çivan to eat, and carries water in his mouth wherewith to besprinkle the image; who actually uses his leathern slippers to brush away the refuse leaves from the head of the god, who knows no sacred texts; and who worships the same god, indeed, but has nothing to commend him save a rude and uninstructed though zealous devotion.]

Meanwhile the mountaineer guards the god by night, returns at eventide to offer his gifts and perform his rude service, and spends the day in providing flesh of beasts for the god’s repast. At dawn, when the young woodman has departed, duly comes the pure and exclusive Brāhman, having scrupulously made his own ablutions, cleanses the precincts, and performs his ceremonious worship. These men so different serve by turns before the same lingam, which they both regard with equal reverence!

But this cannot long continue so. The Brāhman makes a passionate appeal to Çivan to guard himself from these pollutions, the author of which he cannot trace. He then returns to his hermitage, sad and sorely perplexed. But in the night the god appears to him, and thus addresses him¹: 'That which thou dost complain of is to me most dear and acceptable! Thy rival ministrant is a chieftain of the rude foresters. He is absolutely ignorant of the Vēdas and the Çaiṇa texts. He knows not the ordinances of worship. But regard not HIM, regard the spirit and motive of his acts. His rough and gigantic frame is instinct with love to me, his whole knowledge—in thine eyes crass ignorance—is summed up in the knowledge of ME! His every action is dear to me; the touch of his leathern slipper is pleasant to me as that of the tender hand of my son Skanda. The water with which he besprinkles me from his mouth is holy to me as the water of the Ganges. The food he offers me—to thee so abominable—is pure love. I regard not the externals of the worship. He utterly loves me, even as thou dost; but come to-morrow when thou shalt see his worship, and I will give thee proof of his devotion to me².' The Brāhman slept no more that night, but at daybreak was put in hiding behind the liṅgam by the god himself. And now Çivan, who knows the hearts of his worshippers, in order that Tinpan's truth might be manifest, caused blood to trickle down from the right eye of the image. The young worshipper drawing near beheld this, and exclaimed, 'Oh, my master, who hath wounded thee? What sacrilegious hand, evading my watchfulness, has wrought this evil?' Then seizing his weapons he proceeded to scour the neighbourhood to see if any mountaineer or wild animal could be detected as author of the mischief. Finding none, he threw himself on the ground in despair; but at length reflected that he had heard of remedies which would staunch the flow of blood. So he went and sought out in the jungle some herbs of virtue, and applied them; but the wound bled all the more copiously. Then a happy idea struck him: 'for a wounded eye the remedy is another eye applied,' said he; and, pausing not an instant, with his arrow he scooped out his own right eye, and applied it to the bleeding eye of the image, from which at once the blood ceased to flow! At this his rapture knew no bounds. He sang and danced, and poured forth uncouth expressions of ardent thanksgiving; but on looking at the image once more, alas! blood was seen issuing from the other eye. After a moment or two of bewildered sorrow, his countenance was lit up with a radiant light of gladness; for he has still one eye left, and the efficacy of the remedy has been tried already; so he raises himself up, puts his foot close up to the image's suffering eye, that he may be able to feel, when he can no longer see, where to apply the remedy;

² The idea is one expressed with marvellous energy and beauty by Hebrew prophets (Micah vi. 6-8). Horace's lines will occur to the student:—

'Immunis aram si tetigit manus,
Non sumptuosa blandior hostia Mollivit aversos Penates
Farre pio et saliente mica.'

'If the votary's hands are pure, they propitiate the gods with the humblest offering, and would not be more persuasive with the costliest.'

and proceeds to scoop out the other eye. But this last sacrifice is too much for Çivan to permit to be consummated ; from out the lingam he puts forth a sacred hand, and grasps that of the youthful enthusiast, who still holds the arrow ready to accomplish his pious intention, and says : ' Stay, Tinpan, stay thine hand, my loving son ! Henceforth thy place for ever shall be at my right hand, on my holy mount.' Çivagāchari had learnt the lesson, that LOVE AND SELF-DEVOTION ARE MORE THAN CEREMONIAL PURITY, and fell prostrate ; while the choirs of heaven chaunted the beatification of the Saint, who is from age to age adored under his title of Kaṇṇappaṇ—the devotee who gave his eyes for the service of his God.

THE TAMBOUR SONG; OR, REFUGE WITH ÇIVAN.

HYMN XI.

Aruṇāçalam.—The name of Rudra is scarcely ever applied to Çivan in the south, yet it would seem as if the idea of Çivan had been mainly developed from the Vêdic Rudra, the god of Storms, the father of the Maruts, of whom so many stories are told which now are the accepted legends of Çivan. It may safely be said indeed that all the Vêdic Rudra's acts and attributes are given in the modern Çaiva system to Çivan. One of these is connected with the legend of Aruṇāçalam, so often referred to in Tamil Çaiva poetry. According to the legend contained in the Liṅga Purāṇam (Muir, vol. iv. pp. 385-393), it is related that Brahmā and Viṣṇu disputed regarding their respective claims to superiority, and thence a terrific fight arose. At this time to quiet their contention, Çivan, or Mahādēva, appeared as a luminous liṅgam, a pillar of fire, 'equal to a hundred final mundane conflagrations, without beginning, middle or end, incomparable, indescribable, undefinable.' Hari determined to examine the source of this fiery appearance, and took the shape of a boar whose description is very wonderful. Speeding downwards for a thousand years he beheld no base at all of the liṅgam. Meanwhile Brahmā took the form of a swan purely white and fiery eyed, with wings on every side, rapid as thought, and went upwards to see the liṅgam's top; but both failed, and at length united in a hymn of praise to Çivan as supreme; which so pleased the god that he offered them a boon. They asked that they might both obtain an eternal devotion for him, which was granted. 'Thenceforward the worship of the liṅgam has been inaugurated in the worlds. The pedestal is Mahādēvī, and the liṅgam itself is the visible Mahēçvara.' (Comp. Aruṇāçala Purāṇam, Canto II.)

THE SACRED ÇĀRAL¹.

HYMN XII.

THE SPORT OF ÇIVAN'S GRACIOUS 'ENERGY.'

I.

Objections to 'ashes,' the snake, and the mystery of His teaching.

Obj. What He smears is 'white ash'; what He wears is an angry snake;
What He speaks with His lips divine is the mystic word, it seems; MY DEAR!
Ans. What He smears, what He says, what He wears are the means by which He,
As my Lord, rules me; and of all that hath life the Essence is He! ÇĀRALŌ! 4

II.

Objection to His mendicant guise.

Obj. 'My Father, Embirān, to all indeed is Ruler Supreme;
Yet He wears a clouted kōvaṇam;' and why should this be so, MY DEAR?

1. These are the words used by Dakshan to his daughter Umai [Muir, vol. iv. p. 379] in the Kāçi Khāṇḍam, ch. lxxxviii. 16:—

அடலெனப் பூசை ந்ரவம் பூண்பது
உடல் விடம் உண்பது உபாசம் எடுத்து
தடலென ஈசர் விடை வந்த தன்னை,
உடலாக, கோவியிற் வருதல் பாவனே?

[அடல = சாம்பல். உடலு, உ. 'be enraged.']

'His body he smears with ashes; a serpent he wears as adornment;
Poison from the sea he eats; a skull he carries;
He rides a white bull that rages with anger. Such an one,
O damsel, is he fit to come to our sacrifice?'

The ashes, the serpent, the poison, the skull, and the bull are matters of praise in all Çaiava poems.

¹ T. V. U. Pur. VI. 86. NOTE VIII. to the 'life.' Çāral (an imitative word) is the name of a female play, of which the verse is the accompaniment. In each stanza the former couplet, sung by

Ans. The Vēdas four, the meaning with which all lore is fraught, as the great thread Himself alone as kōvaṇam He spreads; behold, ḤĀRALŌ!

III.

The objection that Ḥivan is a homeless ascetic.

Obj. His shrine's the burning ground; fierce tiger skin His goodly garb;
All motherless and fatherless is He; all lonely dwelleth; see, MY DEAR!

Ans. Motherless is He and fatherless; dwelleth all alone; but though 'tis thus,
If He be wroth, the worlds to powder crumble all; behold, ḤĀRALŌ!

IV.

The punitive inflictions of Bhairavan.

Obj. Ayan, the 'Bodiless,' with Anthagan, and Ḥanthiran,
In divers ways He wounded sore, yet slew not; see, MY DEAR!

8. An ascetic mendicant wears a very scanty cloth, suspended by a string round the waist; but why should He, who often appears in such stately majesty (X. 69-72), wear this unseemly pretence of decent clothing? The answer is ambiguous in the original, but seems to say: 'All mysteries are contained and hidden in Him, and the Vēdic revelation is the link between Him and the souls of men.' Strange symbolism! 9. Comp. NOTE I. 13. See XIII. 57. The 'Bodiless' is Kāman.

Kāman, the 'Bodiless.'—The story of the destruction of Kāman (or the god of Love) by Ḥivan is very curious, and should be read by the Tamil scholar in the Kamba-Kāmāyaṇam, I. x. 1-10. It seems that Ḥivan resolved to enter on a course of very strict devotion (Yōgam) with the intention of increasing his powers! The lesser divinities fearing this, instigated Kāman to endeavour to distract the mind of the devotee. Accordingly the archer sallied forth with his arrows composed of the nine most fragrant flowers, and having fitted one on to the string, took aim at Ḥivan's sacred breast. But the god suddenly opened his third eye in the centre of his brow, from which he darted a wrathful flame that instantly reduced Kāman to ashes. At the intercession of all orders of creation Kāman was restored to life, but not to a visible substantial form, and he still pervades the world riding on the chariot of the soft south-wind, working his mischief unseen. Ancient European mythology made him blind: he is here 'bodiless.' The legend may remind us of the story of Echo. The allusions to this myth in these lyrics are endless—and wearisome.

the leader, proposes some mystery regarding Ḥivan, to which the latter couplet is a reply (very unsatisfying!) sung in chorus by all the maidens, with much clapping of hands. As originally written the objection is put into the mouth of the Buddhist Gura, and the reply is by the Ceylon king's hitherto dumb daughter. See the disputation with the Buddhists at Ḥithambaram for the supposed occasion and scope of the song.

It is most necessary however to understand once for all how essential they are to the South-Indian concept of Çivan, as the great and beneficent Being Who is to be approached in prayer and gratefully adored. It will hardly be possible for the reader to do anything like justice to the Poet and religious Teacher, unless he deem it worth while to make the attempt to view these things candidly and dispassionately in the light in which they are viewed by the more devout and intelligent of the Çaiva community.

The legend is simply this : the lesser deities were in sore affliction and came to Çivan for help. He accordingly came forth from Kailāça, and using Mount Mandara as His churning-stick, with Vasu-dēva as the rope which caused it to revolve, proceeded to churn the sea of milk. The result was the appearance of the Ambrosia or food of immortal gladness. But before this a stream of fiery poison black and deadly, the Hāla-hāla poison, rushed forth. This the deity himself drank up, and hence his throat is for ever black, a glorious memorial of his voluntary sufferings. The cup of ambrosia He gave to the grateful gods. Another version of this story may be read in Wilson's 33. The story is given in the Kōyil Purāṇam, § ii, where it is explained! But the verse is variously interpreted and is not of any importance.

Vishṇu Purāṇam, ch. ix, and in Muir, vol. iv. p. 366. It is also to be found in various forms in Tamil verse, but is essentially a Sanskrit and northern myth. The question occurs, was this regarded as literal fact, or was it put forth as a parable? Our readers will perhaps remember the discussion about Euhemerism in Grote's History of Greece, vol. i, see index. It may be said that three classes of Hindus are to be met with in the South: those to whom this and similar histories are wonderful stories and nothing more. They take no more interest in them than we should in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

A second class believe the legends devoutly, and regard them as capable of a mystic interpretation to which however they do not attach any surpassing importance, nor are they at all agreed as to its details. The third class think that under the veil of such legends ancient sages concealed mysterious teachings which they were unwilling to expose to the vulgar gaze. And they say that they alone possess the secret of the esoteric meaning of the myths, which they themselves regard as more or less antiquated and uncouth.

Whether the Upanishads and Sanskrit literature in general lend any countenance to this last idea is exceedingly doubtful. I incline to think that these mystic interpretations are only to be found in later, and chiefly in South-Indian, authors. It is very certain that the Çaiva Siddhānta philosophers have made it their especial business to give to all such legends a more elevating, and at the same time distinctly Çaivite, interpretation. The south of India has from the earliest time been more open than the rest of the east to western influences and teaching, and I feel convinced that this is one of the results. Whether in any way the chasm between western and eastern ideas can be bridged over by any such explanations is of course a most interesting question.

It is quite permitted us to say that, the truth supposed to be concealed (rather too carefully!) under these symbols is that, the Supreme Being has condescended to come to earth to taste the bitter cup of suffering, retaining ever the glorious signs of that agony, while to men He presents the draught of immortal blessedness. However this may be, the epithets of 'Black-throated' and 'Ambrosia' as applied to Çivan need not be, must not be, simply grotesque, but associated with the pathos of suffering and the tenderness of unselfish love.

The idea of this is expressed in the first poem of the Purra-Nānnūrru, which is by Perundēvanār, the translator of the Bhāratam:—

'He wears th' adornment of a throat with poison black; that stain
The chaunters of the mystic scrolls are wont to praise.'

Of course there are many things which are said and sung by the devout of all systems in all lands that require to be explained, and it will generally be found that a mystic meaning is at the root of the uncouth phrase. This has been more or less lost sight of: the symbol is apt to supersede the real thought.

THE UNTHIYĀR; OR, SACRED VICTORY.

HYMN XIV.

ÇIVAN'S TRIUMPHS.

Tamil scholars give different interpretations of the word Unthiyār. It seems to mean 'the players at a game resembling battledore and shuttlecock.' The word Unthi is, I imagine, used for the shuttlecock or ball which the players cause to 'fly aloft.'

In this lyric FIVE GREAT TRIUMPHS OF ÇIVAN are celebrated.

I. The first of these (1-4) is the destruction of the three towns, in Tamil and Sanskrit Tripura, which is curiously enough made to be the name of a giant overthrown by Çivan. I give an abstract of this story from Muir, vol. iv. p. 203:—

'There were in the sky three cities of the Asuras, one of iron, another of silver, and a third of gold, which Indra could not demolish, with all his weapons. Then all the great gods, distressed, went to Rudra as their refuge, and said to him, after they were assembled: "Rudra, there shall be victims devoted to thee in all the sacrifices. Bestower of honour, destroy the Daityas with their cities, and deliver the worlds." He, being thus addressed, said, "So be it;" and making Vishṇu his arrow, Agni its barb, Yama, the son of Vivasvat, its feather, all the Vēdas his bow, and the excellent Savitṛi (the Gāyatri) his bowstring, and having appointed Brahma his charioteer, he in due time pierced through these cities with a three-jointed three-barbed arrow, of the colour of the sun, and in fierceness like the fire which burns up the world. These Asuras with their cities were there burnt up by Rudra!'

II. The second of these triumphs (5-16) is the destruction of Dakshan's sacrifice. The story of this is told with many variations, and is evidently, as Professor Wilson pointed out long ago, a reminiscence of some great struggle between the followers of Vishṇu and Çivan; but it is neither possible to give any full interpretation of it, nor to reconcile the discrepancies in the various accounts of it. The account given below is that of the Kāçi Khāṇḍam, which every student of Tamil should read.

In the Kāçi Khāṇḍam, the account of Dakshan—his sacrifice, punishment, forgiveness, and penance in Benares—occupies chapters lxxxvii-xc inclusive, and fills 148 stanzas. It sums up, with some inconsistencies, the whole story as given in the Sanskrit books. Dakshan (=the Intelligent) is represented sometimes as the father, and sometimes as the son of Aditi; and at other times the two are curiously said to have been reciprocally producers and produced. He is identified with Prajāpati, the Creator. This almost seems like a statement that the whole universe is developed from intelligence, and might appear like a very symbolical setting forth of Hegel's system. Dakshan had many daughters married to the great saints, and especially Kāçyapa (Kāçiban) is said to have been the husband of twelve of them. One of his daughters was Durgā, or Umā, who was subsequently born from the mountain after her voluntary death, and so received the name of Pārvathī. So Çivan, the Supreme, was a son-in-law of Dakshan, the Intelligence from which the Universe was developed. It is rather entangled.

On one occasion all the gods and saints made a visit to the silver mountain Kailāça. They were there received with great condescension, and even kindness, by the mighty one upon whose head is the Kondrai wreath, whose throat is black with the poison he swallowed to save the world, and from the centre of whose forehead a third eye shines resplendent. But the deity did not recognize his father-in-law, nor rise to receive him. This fills Dakshan with disgust, and he proceeds to indulge in the most extravagant abuse of Çivan. It will be seen that everything with which he reproaches Çivan is used by Māṇikka-Vāçagar as praise. Of course a mystical meaning is given to each circumstance! The following is a summary of his language (lxxxvii. 9, &c.):—

'He has no mother, no father, and no relatives!
He is a maniac who dances with demons on the burning-ground.
He has an eye in his brow from which devouring fire blazes forth.
He wears the skin of a fierce tiger, foul and fetid.
Race, family, caste, quality hath he none.
He wears as an ornament the skin of a serpent that causes deadly ill.
He has discarded the anointing of himself with flowery essences,
And besmears himself with foul ashes of corpses in the burning-ground.
His food is poison from the billowy sea;
As conveyance he has an ancient bullock;
He wears the skin of a black elephant;
His ruddy hand grasps a skull bereft of flesh.
If you say he is a *Brāhman*¹, he has changed all rules of ordered life;
If you say he is a king, he bestows no grace; but all destroys;
If you say he is a merchant full of wealth, he goes about begging;
He has no skill in any mystic lore.
Nor is he a *Brahmaçāri*², for a large-eyed damsel is part of his body;
He bears an implement of war, and so is not a worthy ascetic;
He wanders amid the hot desert sands, and so is no seemingly householder;
He cut off the head of the flower god,
So knows not the laws of excellent justice;
The lady with gleaming brows is half of his frame,
So he is not male, or female, or sexless one.
In the day when he destroys all worlds,
Having worn as a garland the skull of flowery Ayan,
And whirling the three-headed gleaming lance Everywhere he kills. Is it possible to call him a saint!'

After thus relieving his mind by abuse to punish Çivan's discourtesy, he resolves to perform a mighty sacrifice (magam), and so gain additional powers. Çivan must be dethroned or slain. All the gods are invited, and there is a very magnificent assembly on Dakshan's mountain. Then comes forth a sage Dadiçi, who protests that no sacrifice can be of efficacy to which Çivan has not been invited; such a place of worship must become 'a burning-ground, where goblins, demons, and dogs prowl around.' His protest is answered by additional abuse, and so the devotees depart, leaving the gods and goddesses to join with Dakshan in the unhallowed offering. And now the great mischief-maker in all such legends, whose name was Nārada, the sweet lutist of the holy mount, hurries to Kailāça to tell the goddess Umā of her father-in-law's projected offering. She longs to be present, and implores her spouse to permit it, but he rejects her request. Somehow or other she does however go, and with every token of filial piety meets her father and mother; and after the first greetings enquires why the great god, the lord of all, is not invited:

'It seems as though you had forgotten the greatest of guests.'

To this, abuse of Çivan is the only answer.

She at once dies, puts off the body which owns Dakshan as father, and is reborn as the daughter of Himavat, whence Çivan afterwards takes her as Pārvathi, 'the mountain maid.'

For the sacrifice and its results, see Kāçi Khāṇḍam, chap. lxxxix.

III. The third triumph is his bestowal of the milky sea on the son of Vasishṭha (stanza xvii). For this it is sufficient to refer to the Kōyil Purāṇam I. 25. It is a rather confused and somewhat meaningless story as it has come down to us.

² Nor a student. See Manu.

IV. The fourth triumph is given at great length in the Kāci Khāṇḍam, and is connected with the god's manifestation as Vira-bhadra. For this it is only necessary to refer to chapter xc of the above work.

In regard to the Kāci Khāṇḍam, indeed, which is mainly a translation from the Sanskrit Skanda Purāṇa, it must be noted that there is in it much didactic poetry of a more elevated character, which has furnished the motive for many verses by the lesser bards. But, on the whole, it may be characterized as a collection of legends which are utterly unprofitable, and have been worked into the devotional poetry of the Čaivites to its very great detriment. The legends of Dakṣha's sacrifice, of the appearance and ferocity of Vira-bhadra as a kind of incarnation of Čivan, and of the unseemly disputes between Viṣṇu and Brahmā as to the pre-eminence, occupy large portions of the book and are utterly useless in these days. We may give a summary of chapter xxxi, entitled 'The Appearance of Bhairava.'

Čivan, the Supreme, envelopes the world in elusive mystery, so that none know him while He is all in all. Hence, even among the gods, disputes arose as to who was the greatest. 'I am the supreme Essence,' cried Viṣṇu. 'I am the Self-existent,' declared Brahmā from his lotus-seat. The sacred Vēda, the unwritten record of mysterious truth, was called upon to decide. The divine essences whose incarnation, or manifestation rather, is the fourfold Vēda spoke out: The first Vēdic genius declared that since Čivan alone performed the three operations of creation, preservation, and destruction, he was the Supreme and unoriginated God. The second declared that since Čivan had performed arduous sacrifices and penances, so as to merit praise from the whole universe, he was the supreme. The third announced the same conclusion, but based it upon the fact that Čivan fills all things with light, and is adored by all the mystic sages as the giver of wisdom. The fourth Vēdic mystery declared that since Čivan revealed himself in various forms exciting emotions of joy and ecstatic devotion in the hearts of his worshippers, who beheld him crowned with cassia-wreaths, he was the greatest of the gods. [It is easy to see the arguments by which the supremacy of Čivan is here upheld, and there are gleams of truth which Christianity emphasises and illustrates, but the legends connected with the statements are very wonderful, and certainly obscure and confuse, rather than illustrate, the truth concerning the supreme and absolute.] Viṣṇu and Brahmā listen only to deride. 'Čivan,' they cry, 'rides on a bull; he has a matted coil of hair; he dances in the burning-ground; he smears ashes; his throat is black with the swallowed poison; he wears as a girdle a hissing snake; he is the leader of a wild demon-host, and Umai is a part of his form. This being so, how can he be the life of the soul of all?' [These are the arguments that were urged by Jains and Buddhists, and the wonder is that they did not everywhere and finally prevail.]

Roused by these insults, Čivan suddenly appears. His aspect is described in the usual terms, and he sends forth a manifestation or incarnation of himself, or of his destroying energy, to which the name of Vairavan (Vira-bhadra) is given. This anomalous being is of terrific appearance, and endowed with all the Destroyer's terrible energy. He is followed by a host of malignant demons. Čivan calls him his son, and bids him destroy all his enemies. Vairavan accordingly seizes the fifth head of Brahmā between his thumb and forefinger, twists it off and throws it on the ground, performing a terrific dance which throws the whole universe and every order of sentient existence into a paroxysm of terror. This subdues the opposing deities, and Viṣṇu worships at Čivan's feet, praising him in the most extravagant terms. The whole ends in a wild orgy, in which Čivan and Brahmā join. This is so often referred to in Čaivite poetry, and seems so incapable of any edifying interpretation, that we have thought it necessary to give the authentic summary from the Kāci Khāṇḍam once for all.

V. The last is the victory over the Ceylon king, Rāvaṇa. This legend is perpetually referred to in the south, and seems to have a popularity among the poets somewhat in excess of its apparent importance.

After his victory over Kuvēra, Rāvaṇa went to Saravaṇa, the birthplace of Karttikēya. Ascending the mountain, he sees another delightful wood, where his car Pushpaka stops, and will proceed no further. He then beholds a formidable dark tawny-coloured dwarf, called Nandičvara, a follower of Mahādēva, who desires him to halt, as that deity is sporting on the mountain, and has made it inaccessible to all creatures, the gods included. Rāvaṇa angrily demands who Čaṅkara (Mahādēva) is, and laughs contemptuously at Nandičvara, who has the face of a monkey. Nandičvara, who was another body of Čivan, being incensed at this contempt of his monkey form, declares that beings, possessing the same shape as himself, and of similar energy,—monkeys,—shall be produced to destroy Rāvaṇa's race (Tasmād mad-vīrya-sanyuktaḥ madrupa-sama-tejasaḥ utpatsyanti badharikam hi kulasya tava vānaraḥ). Nandiçvara adds that he could easily kill Rāvaṇa now, but that he has been already slain by his own deeds. Rāvaṇa threatens that as his car has been stopped, he will pluck up the mountain by the roots, asking in virtue of what power Çivan continually sports on that spot, and boasting that he must now be made to know his danger. Rāvaṇa then throws his arms under the mountain, which, being lifted by him, shakes, and makes the hosts of Rudra tremble, and even Pārvathi herself quake, and cling to her husband (Chachala Pārvathi, chāpi tadā glistha Mahāçvaram). Çivan, however, presses down the mountain with his great toe, and along with it crushes the arms of Rāvaṇa, who utters a loud cry, which shakes all creation. Rāvaṇa's counsellors then exhort him to propitiate Mahādēva, the blue-throated lord of Umā, who, on being lauded, will become gracious. Rāvaṇa accordingly praises Mahādēva with hymns, and weeps for a thousand years. Mahādēva is then propitiated, lets go Rāvaṇa's arms, says his name shall be Rāvaṇa from the cry (raṇa) he had uttered, and sends him away, with the gift of a sword bestowed on him at his request.

THE SACRED TŌṆŌKKAM.

HYMN XV.

There is an amusing illustration, drawn by a native artist, of this game as played in South India. Its name literally means 'aiming at the shoulder,' for it ends up with placing the hands of each opposing pair on the shoulders of the other. In some lines this is used as a symbol of the approach of the soul to Ćivan's feet.

I,

The cleansing from delusion.

The Legend of Çanḍīçuvāra Nāyanār : The Young Brāhman Cowherd.—In a town in the Çōṇa country, called Çeyṇālūr, a Brāhman boy was born, whose name was Viçāra-çarumar, who from his earliest days instinctively understood the whole Çaiṇa creed ; so that when the sages came to instruct him he met them with the recitation of the essential doctrines of the system, which he had grasped by a divine intuition. It may be permitted to repeat the articles of his creed, as these are summed up in the legend : 'All souls are from everlasting fast bound in the chains of impurity. To destroy that impurity, and to give to these souls infinite felicity and eternal release, He who is eternal is revealed. He performs the five Acts of creation, preservation, destruction, "envelopement," and gracious deliverance. He is the one Lord (Paṭhi), Who possesses the eight attributes of absolute independence, purity of form, spontaneous understanding, absolute knowledge, natural freedom from all bonds, infinite grace, endless might, and boundless blessedness. His name is Çivan, the Great Lord. He performs his gracious acts by putting forth the energy (Çatti), Who, as a person, is one with Him, and is therefore the divine Mother of all, as He is the divine Father, and must with Him be loved and worshipped. Nor can we say "we will do this in some future birth," for we are born here as human beings for this and no other purpose ; and the human form in the infinite series of transmigrations is hard to attain unto. Nor should we defer till to-morrow our dedication of ourselves, since we know not the day of our death. Therefore must we avail ourselves of Çivan's gift of grace, studying the sacred Āgamas and other works, without doubting, or commingling of perverse interpretation. This is the way of life !

One day, together with his school companions, he went down to the bank of the river where the village cows were grazing in charge of a man of the herdsman caste. This rustic, having no sense of right and wrong, beat one of the cows with a stick ; but Viçāra-çarumar was vehemently stirred by this outrage, and rushing up to him in great wrath, restrained him from striking the sacred animal : 'Know you not,' said he, 'that cows have come down from the world of Çivan to this earth ? In their members the gods, the sages, and the sacred purifying stream dwell. The five products of these sacred creatures are the sacred unguents of Çivan. And the ashes which are the adornment of the God and his devotees are made from their refuse !' Dwelling upon this idea he conceived a desire to devote himself entirely to the task of herding and caring for the troop of sacred cows ; and accordingly sent away the rustic, who reverentially departed. And thus our hero became a self-dedicated Brāhman herdsman. As such he easily obtains permission of all the Brāhman of the town to take charge of their kine ; and daily along the bank of the beautiful river Manni, he leads forth his troop in the grassy glades and green pastures, allowing them peacefully to graze their fill, and supplying them with refreshing water. When the fierce heat of the sun oppresses, he leads them into the shady groves, and guards them well, meanwhile gathering the firewood necessary for his household worship ; and then at eventide, leaving each cow at its owner's door, he goes to his home.

While things went on in this manner, the cows increased daily in beauty, waxed fat, were joyous, and by day and night poured forth abundant streams of milk for their owners. The Brāhman found that they had more milk than formerly for their offerings, and were glad. The cows, tended with such unvarying solicitude, were brisk and cheerful, and though separated for awhile from their calves that remained tied up in the houses, grieved not a whit, but with joy awaited the coming of their young herdsman, following him gladly, crowding around him like tender mothers, and lowing joyfully at the sound of his voice. The youthful Brāhman, seeing the exuberance of their milk, reflected that this was a fitting unction for the head of the God ; and conceiving a great desire so to employ it, constructed a liṅgam of earth on a little mound beneath the sacred Atti tree on the bank of the river, and built around it a miniature temple with tower and walls. He then plucked suitable flowers, and with them adorning the image, procured some new vessels of clay, and took from each of the cows a little milk, with which he performed the unction prescribed for the divine emblem (the Liṅgam) ; and Çivan, the Supreme, looked down and received with pleasure the boy-shepherd's guileless worship. All essentials of the sacred service he supplied by the force of his imagination. Though this was done daily, the supply of milk in the Brāhman's dairy was no whit diminished.

33. But see எண் ணு, and XIV. 10. 34. The three guardians of the gates of Çivan's city: Tārāgūkshan ('Star-eye'), Kamalākshan ('Lotus-eye'), and Vidyūn-māli ('Lightning-garland').

For a long time this continued, until some malicious person saw what was going on, and told it to the Brāhmins in the village, who convened an assembly before which they summoned the boy's father, and told him that his son Viçāra-çarumar was wasting the milk of the Brāhmins' sacred cows by pouring it idly on the earth in sport. The father feared greatly when he heard the accusation, but protested his entire ignorance of the waste and desecration, and asking pardon, engaged to put a stop to his son's eccentric practices. Accordingly the next day he went forth to watch the boy's proceedings, and hid himself in a thicket on the bank of the river. He soon saw his little son ceremoniously bathe in the river, and then proceed to his miniature temple, gathering sacred flowers and leaves, arranging everything in order for the minutiae of Çiva-worship, and then pouring a stream of anointing milk over the earthen liṅgam. Thus convinced of the truth of the accusation, he was greatly incensed, and rushing forth from his concealment inflicted severe blows upon the boy, and used many reproachful words. But the young devotee's mind was so absorbed in the worship,—so full of the rapture of mystic devotion,—that he neither perceived his father's presence, nor heard his words, nor felt his blows. Still more incensed by the boy's insensibility, the infatuated father raised his foot, broke the vessels of consecrated milk, and destroyed the whole apparatus of worship! This was too much for the young enthusiast to bear; the god of his adoration was insulted, and the sacred worship defiled. He regarded not the fact that it was his father, a Brāhman and a guru, who was the offender; but only saw the heinous sin and insult to Çivan. So with the staff in his hands he aimed a blow at the offender's feet, as if to cut them off; and, behold, the shepherd's staff became in his hands the Sacred Axe of Çivan, and the father fell maimed and dying to the ground. The enthusiastic boy then went on with his worship as if nothing had occurred, but the Lord Çivan, with Umā the goddess, riding on the sacred White Bull, immediately appeared hovering in the air. The young devotee prostrated himself before the holy vision in an ecstasy of joy; when the Supreme One took him up in his divine arms, saying, 'For my sake thou hast smitten down the father that begat thee. Henceforth I alone am thy father,' and embracing him stroked his body with His sacred hand, and kissed him on the brow. The form of the child thus touched by the divine hand shone forth with ineffable lustre, and the God further addressed him thus: 'Thou shalt become the chief among my servants, and to thee shall be given all the offerings of food and flowers that my worshippers on Kailāça's mountain present.' His name thereupon became Çanḍēçuvarar ('the impetuous Lord'). The manifested God finally took the mystic cassia-wreath from His Own head, and with it crowned the youthful saint. And so he ascended to heaven with Çivan, and was exalted to that divine rank. The father, too, who had been guilty in his ignorance of such impiety to the God, and had been punished by the hand of his own son, was forgiven, restored, and with the whole family passed into Çivan's abode of bliss.

THE MOTHER-DECAD; OR, 'SOUL'S PLENITUDE.'

HYMN XVII.

This decad is a series of exclamations uttered by a little girl to her mother. See Vātha-Ūrār-Purāṇam V. 66. It is called தாக்கெனெழி = 'the broken rhythm.'

I.

'His word is the Vēdam; ashes white He wears;
 Rose-red is His form; His drum is the Nātham;
 MOTHER!' SAITH SHE.
 'His drum is the Nātham; to the Four-faced,
 And to Māl too, this Lord is the Lord;
 MOTHER!' SAITH SHE.

II.

'His eye gleams black; He is compassion's sea;
 Within He dwells, He melts the soul,
 MOTHER!' SAITH SHE.
 'Within He dwells, and to the melting soul
 Tears of undying bliss gives He,
 MOTHER!' SAITH SHE.

2. See Lex. ஊவி, and XIX. 32. 2-4. A play on the words Nātham, = 'an instrument of music,' and Nāthar, = 'Lord.' In the later Śaiva philosophy, Nātham is 'the male energy of the Deity.' The Four-faced is 'Brahmā.'

THE KUYIL-DECAD¹.

HYMN XVIII.

The *Kuyil*² is often referred to in these poems. Our Sage, like St. Francis of Assisi, was exceedingly fond of birds, and indeed was filled with love for the whole creation. In this poem he calls upon the Kuyil to join him in the praises of his Master, recounting the chief themes on which he was wont to dilate. The epithets applied to the Kuyil are skilfully varied; it is pictured to us as a diminutive bird haunting the leafy groves (13, 37); of a dark azure hue with a golden tint (9, 33); as uttering a sweet call of a peculiarly tender kind (1, 8); as possessed of a beauty gladdening the eye (17); and as imparting pleasure to all that hear its inviting notes (17, 21, 37). Mystically the Kuyil is the human soul. Comp. Psalm ciii.

I.

Çivan's infinity.

O KUYIL, sweet of song, if thou dost seek our Perumān to know;
If thou would'st ask of His twain feet;—they're planted 'neath the sevenfold gulf.
Would'st hear of His bright jewell'd crown? 'Tis glory old that passes speech.
Nor origin, nor qualities hath He, nor end; CALL HIM TO COME! 4

1. See XX. 9. 2. Comp. VII. 37. Muir, vol. iv. p. 387. The Tamil Aruṇācala-Purāṇam, chap. ii. 'The Sacred Hill,' is the best account of this appearance of Çivan as a mountain:

'Whose crown above the highest height ascended,
Whose base beneath the lowest depth descended.'

Southey's 'Curse of Kehāma' is a beautiful version. 4. Martineau's Types, vol. i. p. 129.

¹ T. V. U. P., V. 67. ² The Kuyil (or Kokila: Eudynamys indicus) is found in all parts of the peninsula of India, and is a great favourite with the people. Its somewhat monotonous cry is more appreciated by the natives of the East than by those of the West, yet it is not unpleasing,—in moderation. Its note is sweet and plaintive. It must not be confounded with the English cuckoo, though it is of the same species, and not unlike it in some particulars. [See Catalogue of Birds in the Museum of the Honourable East-India Company, by T. Horsfield and F. Moore, 1856-1858.]

Arupigalam ¹.

O tender KUYIL, come thou here! Māl sought Him, and the 'Four-faced'-one,
Nor found, then ceased, and pondering stood. Cleaving the heaven, in shining fire, Beyond all worlds He rose that day, His body like the light rayed out.
On prancing steed a groom He rode; CALL Him with streaming lock to COME! 32

IX.

The gracious initiation.

KUYIL, thy dark form gleams with gold; thou in the fragrant grove dost joy!
The Blest, Whose glorious form is bright as splendour of the lotus red,
On earth showed us His feet; set free from every bond, and made me His.
The beauteous cinctured golden Form, th' Ambrosial-One, GO CALL TO COME! 36

X.

His manifestation as a guru.

Hear this, thou KUYIL, calling 'midst the grove whose shady boughs enlace!
A Brāhman here He came, revealed His beauteous rosy feet to me.
'This man is one of us,' He said, and here in grace made me His own!
The LORD OF GODS, Whose sacred form is as red fire, GO BID TO COME! 40

40. See XIX. 4.

METRE OF XVIII.

1. Here the metre is Āçiriya-Viruttam of six feet.
2. These are all of two metrical syllables (G. 174), இயற்றல். They represent the spondee, and the three feet formed by resolution of each long syllable into two short ones; i. e.

 --
 --
 --
 --
 --

3. Each of these feet has two full 'measures' (மரபிமை, G. 16); thus the time of a line is twelve measures (long syllables), or twenty-four half-measures (short syllables).
4. The four lines of each stanza have initial rhyme (G. 182).
5. Each line is divided by caesura into two equal parts, with assonance (G. 183), generally at the beginning of the fourth foot. The lines have most often eight long and eight short syllables.
6. The scheme is :

-- -- | -- -- | -- -- || -- -- | -- -- | -- --
 -- -- | -- -- | -- -- || -- -- | -- -- | -- --
 -- -- | -- -- | -- -- || -- -- | -- -- | -- --
 -- -- | -- -- | -- -- || -- -- | -- -- | -- --

The first half begins and ends, and the second half ends, with a metrically long syllable.

7. Nasals and double letters are often slurred; thus தனி(த்)த is தனித, and செரும(த்)மை is செருமை.
8. Very many lines are dactylic Hexameters, rather after Greek than Latin models :

1. Comp. Ovid, Amores ii. 6: 'Psittacus, cōis imitatrix ales ab Indis, rari forma coloris.'
2. Or 'ruddy'; see Q in Lex. For legend of Ārūr, see Periya Purāṇam, vol. i. p. 45. A whole canto is allotted to it. Called also Mūthūr. In Dēvāram, pp. 647-703, are thirty-four lyrics in its honour. Comp. for the whole song, Paṭṭaṇattu Pillai's poems, Vithya Vinōthini Series, Madras, 1892, pp. 4-8; and in this collection II. 101-124. The differences are instructive. 4. So II. 122; VII. 40; XVIII. 40; XXV. 27. 5. The beautiful chapters lxxiv. &c. in the Kurraḷ illustrate this. 6. Pōṇḍi, 'world,' may be translated also 'grove.' 8. The Pāṇḍiyan land is sacred to Īvan. One of the greatest shrines is at Madura. See XXXVI; and II. 118. Others say that the Īvan land is the 'holy land,' on account of Ćithambaram and Ārūr.

‘THE FREEDOM OF THE UPLIFTED SOUL.’

HYMN XX.

I.

Hail! Being, Source to me of all life's joys! 'Tis dawn;
upon Thy flower-like feet twin wreaths of blooms we lay,
And worship, 'neath the beauteous smile of grace benign that from Thy sacred face beams on us. Çiva-Lord, Who dwell'st in Perun-turrai² girt with cool rice-fields, where 'mid the fertile soil th' expanding lotus blooms!
Thou on Whose lifted banner is the Bull³! Master!
Our mighty Lord! FROM OFF THY COUCH IN GRACE ARISE!

¹ The image of the god is laid upon a couch each evening, and taken up in the morning. This reveille is the first business of the day. This seems strangely at variance with ver. 5. ² This was composed in Perun-turrai, 'the great harbour,' where the poet went to buy horses for his King, and was made a disciple (p. xxi). ³ The bull is Çivan's emblem. He rides on a white bull. It is also on his banner (XIX. 40). The bull-headed Nandi, whose image is everywhere in South India, is his Lord High Chamberlain.

The sun has neared the eastern bound¹; darkness departs;
 dawn broadens out; and, like that sun, the tenderness
 Of Thy blest face's flower uprising shines; and so, while bourgeons forth the fragrant flower of Thine eyes' beam,
 Round the King's dwelling fair hum myriad swarms of bees².
 See, Çiva-Lord, in Perun-turrai's hallowed shrine Who dwell'st!
 Mountain of bliss, treasures of grace Who com'st to yield!
 O surging Sea! FROM OFF THY COUCH IN GRACE ARISE!

III.

The tender Kuyil's³ note is heard; the cocks have crowed;
 the little birds sing out; sound loud the tuneful shells⁴;
 Starlights have paled; day's lights upon the eastern hill are mustering. In favouring love O show to us Thy twin feet, anklet-decked⁵, divinely bright;—
 Çiva-Lord, in Perun-turrai's hallowed shrine Who dwell'st!

¹ The original says, 'Indra's region,' since he is regent of the East. There are eight points of the compass. Over each a deity presides.

² This passage is a curious double entendre. It may also be rendered 'the vast assembled host sing the six-syllables': ṣaṣ-ṣi-ṣā-ya-na-maḥ. The bees, or winged beetles, are called by metonymy 'six-feet.'

³ Comp. VII. 29. The Koil or Kuyil, for which there is no English name. See XVIII.

⁴ The Çaṅkha, or conch-shell, used in the temple music.

⁵ Worn especially by kings and heroes.

HYMN XXIII.

I.

Sever'd from Thee I cannot live.

I, false, am sever'd from the flow'ry feet that, entering here, made my soul melt, distilling nectar sweet.
Yet I, poor wretch, die not as yet; but, in a waking dream, the inner purpose of my soul I've lost.
O Teacher,—King,—Great Sea of grace,—Father,—Whose roseate form
Ayan and Māl could never come to know,—
I know not what to do, O ÇIVAN, Thou Who didst draw near
IN SACRED PERUN-TURRAI'S SHRINE TO DWELL!

 Were sore distress'd, but none Thy flow'ry feet beheld,
 O King ! Me, mastered with a single word,
 Thou held'st erewhile. I pant not now, nor melt in mind subdued ;
 I feel no love devout ; this loveless frame
 I've not subdued ; I wander yet, ÇIVAN, Who didst draw near
 IN SACRED PERUN-TURRAI'S SHRINE TO DWELL !

THE REFUGE - DECAD

'THE ASSURANCE OF MATURITY.'

HYMN XXIV.

It seems probable that this song was founded upon the Buddhist formula which required the devotee to utter nine times the word saraṇam (சரணம் = அடைக்கலம்), three times to Buddha, three times to the law or doctrine, and three times to the congregation (= church, or order. Frankfurter's Handbook of Pāli, p. 81). This entire abandonment of self on the part of the disciple was his initiation into the Buddhistic system. Here our author takes 'refuge' at the foot of the loving Master Who has called him, and will at last receive him to Himself. This element of personal devotion to One Whom he believes to have been the Supreme manifested in the flesh is very striking, and gives a power that was wanting in the Buddhist system. We must remember that all his life our sage was brought into hostile contact with the Buddhists, and that he fashions his poems so as to afford the strongest possible contrast to that which he hated.

THE DECAD OF WONDER.

(RELEASE.)

HYMN XXVI.

I.

With melting mind I said not, 'He is gold,' 'His is a ruby's light ;'
I languish'd pondering charms of damsels young. Boon indescribable, Mercies beyond compare, to me were given ; He of the flowery foot,
THE FATHER, MADE ME HIS, AND JOINED ME TO HIS SAINTS :
SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN ! 4

II.

Of righteous deeds I had no thought, nor joined those who think on these ;
To sorrows born and deaths, I wandered here. He said, 'This is my slave.'
He, the Supernal, stood in nearness manifest,—His half, the Queen.
THE FIRST ONE MADE ME HIS, AND JOINED ME TO HIS SAINTS :
SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN ! 8

1. This may be 'place and wealth' or 'a hoarded treasure.'

III.

Aforetime, that my 'mighty deeds' might pass, the Father triple-eyed,— Whom all find hard to know, to servant-bands abundantly revealed,—
Who plac'd the crescent moon on 'braided lock' of more than golden sheen,
THE SIRE,—He MADE ME HIS, AND JOIN'D ME TO HIS SAINTS :

SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN !

IV.

Perpend the one sole cause for which the world a madman nameth me :
I liv'd as others, knew no way to join me to His grace divine ;
To deaths, to fallings into direful hells, I gave myself a prey.
THE FATHER MADE ME HIS, AND JOIN'D ME TO HIS SAINTS :

SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN !

16

V.

I hasted not to join the choirs ; I pluck'd no flowers nor worshippèd ;
A slave to charms of those of perfum'd locks I squander'd gifts of life.
By night our King dances midmost the fires,—the snake amidst His braided hair!
HE MADE ME HIS, AND JOIN'D ME TO HIS SAINTS :

SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN !

Through my mere folly I the Letters Five forgot, that speak His sacred Name ;
I drew not near those wise in lore divine, longing to share their virtuous deeds.

VII.

This hut untrue, whose walls are flesh, worm-stuffed, decay'd, dripping with all that's foul,—

This did I take for true, whirled round in sorrow's sea. He Who of rarest gem,
Of pearl, of ruby, adamant, and coral red,—the gleaming splendour wears,—
MY FATHER MADE ME HIS, AND JOIN'D ME TO HIS SAINTS :

SUCH WONDER HAVE WE SEEN !

28

VIII.

Erewhile, that I no more might 'bide with Him, He sent, and plac'd me in this cell.
He look'd on me, spake gentlest words of mystery; brake off the yoke; His hand Upraised, made former falseness cease, removed all fault, filled me with gleam-

'Twas thus HE MADE ME HIS, AND JOIN'D ME TO HIS SAINTS :

THE NATURE OF RELEASE¹.

HYMN XXVII.

I.

When shall I reach the Inaccessible?

The gleaming golden Hill, the flawless Pearl, the Shrine of tender love Who made me, last of man, His own, in speechless service glad! He Whom Dark Māl and Brahmā baffled yet approach not,—gave Himself, rare Balm!
When shall I dwell in MYSTIC UNION JOINED WITH HIM, MY FLAWLESS GEM? 4

II.

My soul cries out for Thy rest.

Thy servant I endure not, O my king, upon this earth in mire
Of fivefold sense to sink! In thought adoring Çivan as my Lord,

THE DECAD OF GRACE

OR

'CLEANSING FROM DELUSION.'

HYMN XXIX.

The T.V.U.P. states that this was one of the earliest of the Sage's poems, and that it was sung at Tiru-perun-turrai. It certainly bears the impress of youth, and in many respects is inferior to some of his later poems. It is said to have for its subject the purification of the soul from the great delusion (Mahā-māyā). What this is can only be known by a careful study of the Āiava Siddhānta philosophy. A note on the subject will be found in the Appendix.

The metre is the same as in XXII, and is very sweet. In each stanza, the two latter lines nearly correspond throughout the whole poem, an epithet or two being changed. Āivan is addressed as the god who appeared in the Triclinia (Kuruntham) grove near Tiru-perun-turrai, and about thirty different epithets are applied to him, some of which are mere repetitions. The epithets applied to Tiru-perun-turrai are also varied. The last line in each stanza contains a Telugu phrase equivalent to 'and what is that?' so that the line literally reads: 'Save Thou in grace, saying "what is that"?' or in other words, 'What is there to fear? fear not.' The poet is complaining of the power of earth-born delusions, and prays the god to take away his anxious fears. I cannot trace any sequence in the thought from stanza to stanza. Comp. 'the Life,' § 2.

In the Siddhānta, very great stress is laid upon the idea that all embodiment, while it is painful and to be got rid of as soon as possible, is yet a gracious appointment of Āivan, wrought out through Āakti, for the salvation of the human soul through the destruction of deeds, which are the root of all evil to mankind (NOTE VI). Now the Buddhist formula represents suffering as being the whole account of the matter: 'Birth is suffering, old age is suffering, sickness is suffering, death is suffering. The origin of suffering is the thirst for pleasure, being, and power. The extinction of this thirst brings about the extinction of suffering.' The Āiava Siddhānta doctrine, on the contrary, gives to life and suffering a real significance. The present life is a probation,—a purgatory,—a preparation for endless fellowship and communion with the Supreme. Thus Grace is recognised where the Buddhist sees only suffering; and the instrument of man's release is that wisdom which understands the divine purpose, and adapts itself to that purpose. Our Sage dwells much upon the value of prayer, and of humble worship paid to the divine guru, while in Buddhism all is to be done by unaided human effort. At every point the two systems are in directest opposition!

THE LYRIC OF THE 'EAGLE-MOUNT.'

THE SIGHT OF THE 'GURU.'

HYMN XXX.

This is one of the places which the Sage is said to have visited before seeing Çithambaram. It would appear that here he had some peculiar manifestation of the god, who had revealed himself to him in Perun-turrai. It is open to conjecture that the Guru, whom he regarded as Çivan manifested in the flesh, resided there, or at least was a constant visitant. The place itself is a renowned Çaiva shrine, and has its own legend, a considerable poem of 832 quatrains. This is of recent origin, and, I should suppose, of small authority. It states that the original name of the hill was Vēda-giri, or the hill of the Vēda. It is said to have four hills clustered together, each being one of the four Vēdas, while the central peak, which is of basaltic formation, is Çivan Himself in the form of the Liṅgam. It is curiously stated that 'in Ārūr the god dwells for the first watch of the night, and in Çithambaram for the midnight watch; but in Vēda-giri he is always to be found.' The name of the hill of the Vēda was changed to that of the hill of the Eagle, because two eminent persons, having disputed an order of Çivan, were sentenced to perform penance there.

In sacred glories countless didst Thou come,

AND SHOW THYSELF UPON THE EAGLE'S HILL.

‘MINE EYES HAVE SEEN.’

THE SIGHT OF THE MYSTIC DANCE

OR

THE UNSPEAKABLE VISION.

HYMN XXXI.

Tillai.—In the legends of the Sage it appears that he did not visit Tillai till he had seen the other shrines of Āiava worship, and had become renowned both as a devotee and as a poet. It almost appears as if there existed some rivalry between the great temple of the Pāṇḍiyan land in Madura, and the famous shrine of the Ćōṛa land in Ćithambaram. It is quite certain that this latter in great measure superseded the former. It does not appear, indeed, that Māṇikka-Vāṇagar ever revisited Madura after his formal renunciation of his position there. It may almost be inferred that he was never heartily forgiven by the king for the misappropriation of the cost of the horses. Of the fifty-one poems about a half were composed in Tillai¹, and these may be divided into two classes: the lyrics that express his own feelings and illustrate his life; and those which were composed (as is believed) for the use of others, either in the temple, or in their sports. These last are much more artificial than the former. I wish that it had been possible to re-arrange the poems.

Among the Tillai lyrics are to be found his most impassioned utterances. With this poem (XXXI) must be compared (XL), both of them expressing his enthusiastic joy at being permitted at length to behold the greatest shrine of his Master.

On the legends of Tillai I have written a separate paper. NOTE VII.

Tillai in the time of the Sage was to the devotees of Ćivan what Jerusalem was to the Jews of old; and many of the expressions in these two lyrics will remind the reader of Psalm cxxii; and not a few of the expressions are identical with those in the rhyme often attributed to Bernard of Morlaix. One is frequently reminded of ‘Jerusalem the Golden, with milk and honey blest.’

Shall I get free from Self?

Thou Partner of the bright-eyed maid ! To dwell among Thy saints, Desiring Thee in truth, shall it be giv'n to sinful me
 By Thine own grace, gaining the ancient sea of bliss superne,
 To rest, in soul and body freed from thought of 'I' and 'mine' ?

VI.

Longing desire of the Infinite Bliss.

Thy loving ones have gained 'cessation' absolute ; but here
 My spirit ever melts, outside I lie,—base dog,—and mourn !
 O Master mine, I would attain true love's vast sea of bliss,
 That change, surcease, oblivion, sev'rance, thought, bound, death knows not ! 24

VII.

 That I, low dog, with added pains and pining sore should bide ?

VIII.

Come quickly.

Enter'd amongst Thine own, to whom true melting grace abounds,
 I stand with soul like tough bambusa stem, and wear away.
 O Çivan, grant the love Thy crowned servants bear to Thee!
 O swiftly come, and give to me Thy tender beauteous Foot!

32

IX.

Was I not made Thine own?

Thine own stood round, and all declar'd: 'No grace withheld, all grace
 Is given,'—and I, Thy servant, shall I mourn as aliens wont?
 Thou King of Çiva-world, by glorious grace didst change my thought,
 And make me Thine.—I pray Thee, Lord, place me in changeless bliss!

Thou Partner sole of the Gazelle! Sweet fruit to them that worship Thee!
 Teacher! If I am like an unbor'd gourd, doth thus Thy glory live?
 O King, when comes the time that Thou wilt grant in grace to me
 A soul that melts and swells in knowing Thee, Who cam'st in flesh?

40

XI.

Must I languish here?

In concert joining shall Thy saints, there bending smile and joy?
 O Master, drooping, all forlorn, like withered tree, must I Stand sullen while they mingle, melt, souls swelling, lost in bliss
 In rhythmic dance? Grant bliss of sweet communion with Thy grace!

43, 44. This is, in Tamil, somewhat incoherent.

THE DECAD OF THE BRUISED HEART

OR

'SELF-DEDICATION.'

HYMN XXXIII.

[Comp. Life, § v.] It would be hard to find a more touching expression of absolute mystic self-renunciation than these verses contain.

I.

Useless suffering.

If cruel pain oppress from 'deeds of old,' guard Thou
Who ownest me! If I, a man of 'cruel deeds'
Suffer, from this my woe doth any gain accrue?
O light of Umai's eyes, take Thou me for Thine own!
And though I err, ah! should'st not Thou forgive,— Thou on whose crest the crescent rests? If I appeal, Wilt Thou withhold Thy grace, Father, from me Thy slave?

II.

Why is the affliction of embodied existence prolonged?

Thy slave's afflictions all to drive far off I deem'd
Thou mad'st me Thine, erewhile; Thou Partner of the Queen, Whose form is like the slender creeping plant! Our King; bidding me come, why didst Thou not in grace destroy a dog like me, hath it this day pass'd all away?

Thou Partner of the Tender One, our Mighty King,

If Thou but say the word! If Thou didst take me once

On me? our Lord,—Thou of eight arms and triple eye!

IV.

Bridegroom of Her with fawnlike eyes! Our King! If Thou hast caused me Thine abiding glory to forget;
If Thou hast thrust me out in fleshly form to dwell;
if Thou hast caused Thy slave to wander here forlorn; Knowing Thy servant's ignorance, O gracious King, when comes the day that Thou Thyself wilt show Thy grace?
Ah! When, I cry, when wilt Thou call me back to Thee?

DESIRING Thee, how hard to reach! Yet me Thou didst DESIRE, my service claim! DESIRING what didst Thou Bestow Thy grace? That and naught else do I DESIRE!
And if aught else there be that stirs in me DESIRE,
That too, in sooth, is Thy DESIRE,—is it not so?

VII.

Thyself didst take for Thine. This birth-illusion's thrall Is plac'd within Thy charge alone. And I in sooth, is there aught I need beyond that, with care search out?
Herein is there authority at all with me?

Thou may'st again consign me to some mortal frame;
Or 'neath Thy jewelled foot may'st place me, Brow-eyed One!

32

IX.

My soul is fixed on Thee.

Thou in Whose brow a central eye doth gleam! Thy feet—the twain—I saw; mine eyes rejoic'd; now, night and day, Without a thought, on them alone I ponder still!

How I may quit this earthly frame, how I may come
To enter 'neath Thy feet in bliss, I ponder not!

Save Thee, O King, should I Thy servant ponder aught?
Thy service here hath fulness of delight for me!

‘MY SOUL IS CONSUMED.’

RAPTURE OF LIFE IN ÇIVAN.

HYMN XXXIV.

The lyric is a good example of the enthusiastic expression of Bhakti. See NOTE VIII.

I.

His praises.

Partner of Umai's loveliness! Destroyer of the 'deeds'
That to this frame cling fast! Thou Guardian of the Bull! Who dwell'st
In Perun-turrai's sacred shrine by well-skilled bards extolled!
When shall I joy, O when exulting sing, henceforth, I too?

II.

His condescending love.

And who am I would reach His foot? To me, mere cur, a throne
He gave; enter'd my flesh; mixed with my life; leaves not my soul.
With crown of honey-dripping-locks, blest Perun-turrai's Lord
On me a gracious boon bestow'd, that heavenly ones know not!

1. The Tamil line is a sad blemish! 2. 'Karma' or 'vinai.' NOTE V. 4. This is, in fact, the idea: 'When will it be granted to me to join the saints in Çivan's paradise?' There are four of the stereotyped invocations.

 The crimson flower, Who dwell'st in sacred Perun-turrai's shrine,
 And still remain'st, the very self within my soul ! 36

While dwellers in the heavenly world do holy deeds, in vain
 Bearing a frame of flesh compact, I stand like forest tree.

THE SACRED PĀṇḌI. [THE GROWTH OF RAPTURE.]

HYMN XXXVI.

The Lyric of the Sacred Pāṇḍi.—NOTE IV should be studied as introductory to this very dramatic poem, which is in every way a remarkable composition; yet I should hardly venture to affirm that Māṇikka-Vāṇagar was its author. In order to understand it, it is necessary to call to mind the strange legend of Çivan's appearance at Madura as a horseman, or as He is here called a warrior. [Life, § iv.] The first stanza is supposed to be uttered by the poet as he contemplates the God entering Madura on that occasion, surrounded by the other gods, all on splendid chargers. Çivan Himself is mounted upon such a steed as the world has never yet seen, and combines in His appearance the attributes of the leader of a band of foreign merchants, the graces of the accomplished knight, and the majesty of a king. He has come, according to His promise, to save His servant from suffering, and to vindicate His fidelity. The poet in his soul adores his Deliverer and his God.

In the remaining stanzas he addresses the assembled multitude, and expounds the mystery (NOTE I): 'Fear not as though it were the Avatar of some ruthless conqueror! This horseman is Çivan,'—the founder, according to legend, of the dynasty of Pāṇḍiyan kings. 'He is the abiding King of Madura, and now He comes in grace to the mortal king of Madura, Arimartanan.' The whole typifies the sacred war that He wages as the Pathi (NOTE XII) against the enemies and tormentors of His people's souls. The third stanza skilfully, though by an anachronism, allegorizes the flood that Çivan brought upon the city, when at His command the Vaigai overflowed its banks. In the fifth stanza he spiritualizes the idea that Çivan appears here as a merchant, a seller of horses. The sixth, referring to His previous appearance at Perun-turai, hints at His character as a Guru, a giver of spiritual light; and the whole ends with an urgent call to the people to throw aside all foolish delusions, and to march boldly forward under His banner, and accept Him as their King. The way in which the whole legend is allegorized points, it may be thought, to a later period, when the Çaiṣa Siddhānta system had been more developed; and when, under the influence of the Santāna-Teachers (NOTE XI), the whole system was being harmonized. There is here a disposition to make little of the myth, and to bring into prominence its spiritual teaching. This was the second stage of the Çaiṣa development. This however is mere conjecture, and there seems to be scarcely any means for its absolute verification.

The state of the saint, and his experiences are shown in chapter viii of Umā-Çivāçāriyar, which is given in NOTE VI.

The metre is to my ear the most rhythmical of all the species of Tamil poetry. The student should learn to recite and enjoy the verses, if he would fully understand them!

The Holy War.

'Good friends, persist not in this round of BIRTH! This is the time! The King

'While there is time, give Him your love, and save yourselves! Haste ye to Him

And him of faces four, and all the heavenly ones, to draw anigh;
Who to His servants stores of grace dispenses, our good Pāṇḍi-lord!' 20

VI.

'This is His day of grace:' a teacher.

'That gathering darkness may disperse, illusions cease, and all be clear,
The Splendour urges on His steed. The Minavan himself knows not To utter all His praise. Would ye all joy obtain, seek His blest Foot!
This is the gift in rarest grace the Pāṇḍiyan gives,—RELEASE for aye!' 24

VII.

'He gives audience:' a conquering king.

'When on illusion's charger He in beauty rides, and gathers round
His waiting hosts; the enmities whose name is "earthly birth" shall cease.
To those who refuge find He gives grace, glorious, vast, inscrutable.
Draw near the South-king's mighty Foot, Whose conquering banner proudly waves!' 28

18. Vishṇu is said to have swallowed the earth. But see Muir, vol. iv. p. 116; and Lex. மக.
20. Brahmā. 22. Minavan means 'He of the Fish-(banner)'; and is a title of Pāṇḍiyan kings, a fish being on their banner. Sometimes it is = Çivan, as the ideal Pāṇḍiyan. 23. Seems corrupt.
25. The horses were jackals! See Life, § iv. 28. There is an alternative (and better) reading:
'Whose gifts of mercy wide extend;' see Tamil, Lex. செவடி.

‘Receive His gracious gift.’

‘In deathless rapture’s flood our souls He plunges, shows His changeless grace;
Drives far away our DEEDS, dissolves the bonds of old impurity;
And makes us His! Come draw ye near the Pāṇḍi-ruler’s mighty Foot.
Press forward, take the gracious boon of Him Who made the circling world!’ 32

IX.

The magic power of His appearing.

‘That men may cross the mingling sea of evil DEEDS and future BIRTH,
The Pāṇḍi-king supreme, Who melts the soul of those that love and praise,
Upon His charger came. When this the slender flower-like maidens knew,
Like trees they stood,—their senses rapt, themselves forgot, and all beside!’ 36

X.

‘In faith and love cling to Him.’

‘As once He conquered death, so now the five sense-kings He conquered too;
And then, in beauteous state, Himself,—and the great Goddess with Him,—sat!
Strong Warrior, on the Bull he came to Minavan, and slew his foes!
O ye of weak and wavering faith! Draw near, hold fast His roseate Feet!’ 40

32. Compare XLVI. 37. See Pope’s Nāḍiṇār, p. 6: Through Him the faithful have victory over death and the phenomenal sense-world! 40. This is Tiruviṇai-āṇḍal, 30.

THE DECAD OF THE 'TENACIOUS GRASP.'

HYMN XXXVII.

This is one of the most characteristic of the Sage's lyrics, and would seem to belong to a later period than that when the 'cry of the forsaken' (VI) was composed. It is in singular contrast to that lyric. He had meanwhile visited many shrines, and had passed through much struggle; but when he reached what is here called Tiru-tōṇi-puram (the sacred Boat-town), of which the modern name is Shialli¹, he found a magnificent temple there, that seemed to him like a reproduction on earth of the silver mountain Kailāsam, on which the God dwells in splendour with Pārvathi. This shrine has always been remarkable, but is especially honoured now as the reputed birthplace of Tiru-ñāna-sambandhar; who, in popular estimation, is perhaps the greatest of the Ćaiva saints. In his legend we have elsewhere given some notices of this his home. It has twelve names connected with wild legends; but is called here 'the sacred Boat-town,' because when at the end of each aeon the deluge of universal destruction overwhelms the universe, this shrine floats securely on the waters,—the everlasting ark! Here it seems that the Sage renewed his vows to his guru, from whom he had somewhat departed in thought and practice. He seems to regard himself now as a செங்குத்தன் (NOTE V); and declares that he will henceforth hold fast his allegiance under all circumstances, in life and through death. Compare NOTES IV and VII.

THE MIRACLE-DECAD.

[THE UNUTTERABLE EXPERIENCE¹.]

HYMN XLI.

The following decad was composed at Tiru-perun-turral, and is probably one of the first sung by our bard. It is in some respects quite unique among his compositions, and certainly has not the flowing ease and rapture of some of his subsequent verses; but perhaps it reveals more of himself than any other. It was put forth, as would seem, immediately after his conversion; and is a thankful acknowledgment of the grace that has delivered him (as he now thinks) completely, and for ever, from the bonds of sensual passion.

The three things² which a Çaiva saint has to get free from are sensual passion, wrath, and the infatuation that regards the phenomenal as the real. Our Sage seems never to have been troubled with wrathful tendencies; and, in fact, must have been a very gentle and sweet-tempered man; but it must be remembered that at the time of his conversion he was yet in his early youth, the Prime Minister and favourite of the great Pāṇḍiyan king, the virtual ruler of that ancient realm, boasting a pure and lofty lineage, of prepossessing appearance and manner, instinct with the glow of a poet's enthusiasm; and, in fact, possessing all that the phenomenal world has to give. Remembering, too, the tone and manners of his time and people, it is not to be wondered at that this poem makes acknowledgment of a previous utter absorption in worldly enjoyments, and a habit of mental infatuation,—apparently absolute. From the first and third of the trio of evils, he had very little chance, humanly speaking, of ever becoming free. Yet the history tells us that he had previously sought for light, had consulted teachers of many systems, and had waited in darkness and in bonds for the coming of the Master Whose service should be 'perfect freedom' from sensual thralldom. This poem is his thanksgiving for (what he believes to be) his final deliverance. It will be noted that he dwells with persistent monotony on one theme: he is 'free'; the time has not yet come for the analysis of his feelings, or for considering his future career. There is here an almost entire absence of mythology,—the one idea of God that he has before him is the loving Guru Whose feet have crowned the suppliant's head; even Umā, the mother, is not mentioned or alluded to; he utters no invitation to others to join him in praise: his is a gladness with which no stranger can intermeddle.

The other poems, sung in the same place soon after, show him recovering from the overwhelming effect of his first glad surprise, and in them he finds it possible to dwell upon other topics.

The Tiruvāçagam is a veritable Pilgrim's Progress, and surely reveals the experience of a devout and godly soul. It is possible that in this and in other of the poems, lines may have been altered and even verses added; for there is a noticeable discrepancy here and there; but internal evidence justifies us in concluding that mainly we have here the unrestrained utterances of a Çaiva mystic of the eighth century.

I gave no fitting gift with lavish hand of full-blown flowers ; nor bowed with rev'rence meet.
He grace conferr'd, lest I should tread the paths of grief, with mind bewildered by soft dames
With fragrant bosoms fair. He came to save, and showed to me His golden jewell'd feet !
As KING in presence manifest He stood :

The Ineffable Essence.

Busied in earth I acted many a lie ;
I spake of 'I' and 'mine,'—illusions old ;
Nor shunned what caused me pain ; while sins increased
I wandered raving. Me, that BEING RARE,—
By the great mystic Vēdas sought in vain,— held fast in presence there ; to lowly me Essential sweetness was the food He gave :
THIS MIRACLE OF GRACE I KNOW NOT, I !

12

IV.

The Helper.

To 'birth' and 'death' that cling to man, I gave no thought ;
and uttering merest lies went on my way.
By eyes of maids with flowing jet-black locks disturbed, with passion filled, I helpless lay.
He came ! the anklets on His roseate feet,—
I heard their tinkling sound ; nor parts the bliss !
In grace my precious HELPER made me His :
THIS MIRACLE OF LOVE I KNOW NOT, I !

enjoy'd ; by tender maidens' charms was stirr'd ;
I wandered free in joyous intercourse ;

My spirit stirred, entered within, and made me His :

VI.

The ' Sea of excellence.'

I gave no thought to ' birth ' and ' death,' that yield their place successive ; but with maidens joined I sank engulfed as by a mighty flood :
their rosy lips my death ! I madly roamed.

Loving and gracious.

Ye maids, the Lord whose eye looked on me sweetly, claiming service due;
The Warrior-lord, in Perun-turrai girt with cocoa-groves Who dwells;
Who takes the maidens' armlets bright, and claims our soul and service true.
UPON HIS ROSEATE FOOT'S EXPANDING FLOWER OUR HEADS SHALL GLEAMING REST!

IV.

Gracious manifestations.

With pious men around, Parābaran¹ on earth appeared, a Seer.
Mid saints made perfect, Çiva-Lord dances in Tillai's city old.
Mystic! He comes, enters our homes, makes us His own, our service claims.
UPON THE MIGHTY ROSEATE FOOT'S FLOWER GIVEN OUR HEADS SHALL BLOOMING REST!

THE PILGRIM-SONG.

[RAPTURE.]

HYMN XLV.

This is our Sage's wonderful 'psalm of the up-going,' Psalm cxxii. He commemorates his first visit to Tillai, and thence mystically sets forth the soul's pilgrimage through the world of sense to union with Çivan on the silver mountain.

I.

The setting-forth on the journey.

Our King with head flow'r-wreath'd, BHUYAÑGAN-LORD, by mercy's swelling flood that all dissolves, Commingled ever, like perception's self, within our souls,—'O come,' hath said in love,
 And made us lowly ones His own! Come ye with one accord; behold, the time hath come;
 Pass we,—falsehood for ever left behind,— to enter 'neath the Master's jewelled feet!

4

உ.

புகவே வேண்டா புலன்களினீர்;

தாமே தமக்குச் சுற்றமுந்,
 தாமே தமக்கு விகிவகையும்,
 யாம் ஆர், எமதார், பாசம் ஆர்,— என்ன, மாயம்? இவைபோகக்

II.

The pilgrim's preparation of soul.

Enter no more the juggling senses' net !
 BHUYAṆGAN's flow'ry feet, the mighty Lord,
 Ponder intensely,—other things desire ye not :
 dismiss them, let them go, and pass ye on !
 With joyous smile He, entering this world, made us—who were like curs impure—His own.
 As it befits to draw anigh the Lord, let each with no weak faltering step move on !

III.

Earthly ties must be loosed.

Each to himself be his own kith and kin !
 each to himself be his own law and way !
 For who are 'we'? what 'OURS'? and what are 'BONDS'?
 illusions all,—let these departing flee !

7. This joyousness of Çivan's manifestations is much insisted on. (NOTE I.) All is the 'sport' of the Supreme.

28. Tennyson:—

'No light: so late! and dark and chill the night!
 O let us in, that we may find the light!
 Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now.
 'Have we not heard the bridegroom is so sweet?
 O let us in, tho' late, to kiss his feet!
 No, no, too late! ye cannot enter now.'

Anticipate the joys of fruition.

Ah, think how ye may reach the goal ! Your thoughts correct, and duly chasten'd, ponder this !
 Ye, who are sinking now in love's excess,— enjoying, never sated, the ambrosial grace Of BHUYAṆGAN, the Spouse of Her, whose eyes are like the gleaming spear that warrior wields,— Joy ye to go to Çivan's jewell'd foot, nor wallowing lie ye here in falsehood's mire !

X.

They enter in !

Will ye not come this day, and be His own, and prostrate fall, and worship, and adore ?
 Those lost in wilderment, who would esteem ?
 Ye who bewilder'd and confounded stand,
 If ye would perfect clearness gain, this do !
 Ye who would gain in this wide realm the grace Of sacred BHUYAṆGAN, of Çiva-world the King ! Ah, haste ye, haste ye, haste ye on !

THE SACRED MARCH.

[THE HOLY WAR.]

HYMN XLVI.

I.

Strike the sounding drum of the Guru, Wielder of wisdom's sword;
Spread the white canopy over the Guru, Who mounts the charger of heaven;
Enter and take to you armour of ashes, fragrant, divine;
Possess we the heavenly fortress, where hosts of illusion come not!

II.

Servants of His,—march on in the van; ye Devout ones,—move on the flanks;
Ye Sages of power illustrious,—come fill up the swelling ranks;
Ye Mystics of strength unflinching,—advance and close up the rear:
We shall rule the heavenly land, no hosts of evil for ever to fear!

2. Comp. XIX. 24, where His charger is called வாக்புரீ, i. e. 'the horse of heaven,' hence வாக here seems to be for வாகம். Çivan, as Agni, is called Rohiṣṭava (= 'possessing red horses'). The Maruts, or personified winds, are sons of Rudra, and also his charioteers. Some reminiscence of this led to such expressions as that in our text. 5-7. Here are four classes of holy warriors:—

(1) Servants (செவந்தர்), i. e. the seventy-two legendary Çaiṣa saints. (2) Devout men (பதவர்), i. e. the ordinary good Çaiṣas. (3) Yogis (யோகி), i. e. ascetics, or contemplative saints. (4) Mystics (மெய்), i. e. those who have gained supernatural powers by austerities. See Lex.

THE SACRED VENBĀ.

[THE STATE OF 'THOSE WHO HAVE ATTAINED'.]

HYMN XLVII.

This purports to have been composed immediately after his return to Perun-turrai, when he was hoping for speedy consummation, but felt impatient. [Life, § v.]

I.

How shall I endure this state of imperfection?

What shall I do while twofold deeds' fierce flame burns still out,— Nor doth the body melt,—nor falsehood fall to dust?
In mind no union gained with the 'Red Fire's honey'
The Lord of Perun-turrai fair!

II.

How employ the weary time of waiting?

Shall I cry out, or wail, or dance, or sing, or watch?
O Infinite, what shall I do? The Sire Who fills
With rapturous amaze,—great Perun-turrai's Lord
Let all with me bending adore!

1. For metre, see Pope's Nālaṭiṇār, Introduction, p. xxvi. Nos. XIX and XLVIII are in the same metre: in all twenty-eight quatrains. 3. Çivan's colour is red, and he is the fiery one,—the later representative of the Vedic deity Agni. Here, 'honied grace' comes from the 'fiery one'! 1-3. G. 83. Old future forms.

‘Then are they glad because they be quiet ;

So He bringeth them unto their desired haven.’ Psalm cvii.

திருப்படையாட்சி.

[சீவோபாதிஷ்டதல்.]

[Each verse contains four lines under one சதகம். Each of these is divided into two precisely similar halves, which are hexameter dactylic hypercatalectic. Each of these half-lines has generally a caesura in the fourth foot, dividing the half-lines into quarter-lines, all the four having the same சேர். A verse is thus printed in sixteen quarter-lines, or eight half-lines. They are best read as dactyls—with an accent on every Nēr.

THE MARSHALLING OF THE SACRED HOST. [THE CESSATION OF LIFE'S EXPERIENCES.]

HYMN XLIX.

It was no easy task to work out a version of this lyric, the rhythmic beauty of which is very remarkable. I have striven, at the risk of sundry irregularities in metre, to imitate the flow of the original ; but the numberless allusions in a poem, which sums up the whole Çaivite idea of the blessedness of Çivan's final manifestation to the emancipated soul, will give the reader trouble, if he is at all to enter into its spirit. The metre itself is very unusual, resembling somewhat that of the Attys of Catullus, and is much admired by those who use the poem in their temple service. My rendering is, I believe, strictly and almost literally exact ; but it differs in some respects from the Tamil paraphrases. The intense mystic fervour of the song must make itself felt !

Thou Refuge of the stony worthless heart,— how one like me,—distressed,—cast off,— Sunk in the sea of fond desire,—at length, how may I come to Thee?

II.

Have pity on my lonely grief!

Thou gav'st the station blest I knew not of;
but I knew not Thy grace,—was lost!

THE WONDER OF SALVATION.

[ENJOYMENT INEFFABLE.]

HYMN LI.

This hymn was composed after he had settled down in Tillai, his active life finished, and was waiting for the great release. He surveys, as he was so fond of doing, the whole course along which his Master had guided him; acknowledges how often he had fallen through an undisciplined and unpurified mind; and records with thankfulness that grace had given him the victory at last. No rapture is like his! Each verse addresses his Master variously as (1) Father, (2) the Mystic Dancer, (3) the Guru, (4) the High and Lofty One, (5) the Master, (6) the Blissful, (7) again as the Guru, (8) the Author of all things, and (9) the Mother (being one with Umai). See T. V. U. P., chap. vii. p. 2, and the Memoir, § viii.

I.

The Father's converting grace.

To me, who toiled and moiled 'mid fools, that knew not way of final peace,
He taught the way of pious love;—and that 'old deeds' might cease and flee, Purging the foulness of my will, made me pure bliss, took for His own;—
'Twas thus the FATHER gave me grace: O RAPTURE! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 4

1, 2. In this and the next verse the word 'way' or 'path' is used again and again; perhaps in allusion to the Buddhist use of it. 2. See Pope's Nālaḍi, chap. xi.

II.

The mystic Dancer converts the heretic.

A way that was no rightful way I followed, deeming it the way,—
That I might seek no meaner way, but only seek His sacred grace
To gain,—He, Whom no signs describe, His mystic DANCE has given to know!
'Twas thus the DANCER gave me grace : O RAPTURE ! WHO SO BLEST AS I ? 8

III.

The Teacher leads and guards in the way of truth.

Me trusting every lie as truth,—plunged in desire of women's charms,—
He guarded that I perished not with soul perturb'd,—the Lord Superne,
On whose left side the Lady dwells! He brought me nigh His jewell'd feet,— 'Twas thus my GURU gave me grace : O RAPTURE ! WHO SO BLEST AS I ? 12

IV.

The Lofty One purifies by discipleship.

To me,—born in this clay, and doom'd, o'erworn, to perish, and to fall,—
Love inconceivable He gave ;—made me His own ;—caused me to wear
His own perfumèd ashes white ;—that I the way of purity
Should reach, the LOFTY gave me grace : O RAPTURE ! WHO SO BLEST AS I ? 16

V.

The Master relieved my soul of its fear.

Afflicted sore by glancing eyes of silly damsels, soft of foot,—
I stood, my mind by sorrow pierced; and then Thy grace I gain'd,—was sav'd,— Ev'n I, O MASTER mine! Thou bad'st Thy servant come; 'Fear not,' Thou said'st!
'Twas thus that grace to me was given: O RAPTURE! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 20

VI.

The Last-One saved me from sensual servitude.

Birth of this frame that burns and falls I took for true,—did many deeds;
In converse joy'd with maidens wreathed in flowers, with lustrous armlets deck'd.
My bonds He cut, made me His own, cleansed foulness so no trace was left!
'Twas thus the LAST-ONE gave me grace: O RAPTURE! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 24

VII.

The Guru's esoteric teaching.

Prostrate it was my fate to fall in 'wilderment of fair ones' charms.
In gentle love He led me forth, loosing the prison bars of 'bond';
Showed me the way to 'scape; and taught the meaning of the mystic Ōm.
'Twas thus the GURU gave me grace: O RAPTURE! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 28

24. This is considered to be especially Çivan's glory. He is the Omega! When all phenomena have disappeared, merged by Him in original Mâyâ, He remains, an abiding refuge. See 'Fruit of Grace,' chap. i. 4. Çiva-Mâna-bôdham, Aphorism I: 'The Last is the First.' ANTHAM ÂTHI, the Involver (destroyer) is the Evolver (creator). NOTE XIV. 27. Ōm. Ōhgâram. NOTE II.

VIII.

The First saved me by gift of personal devotion.

My troubled soul was whirled around in circling tide of death and birth ;
I fell, enamoured with the charms of those with jewels rare adorned ;
The Lord, whose Form the Lady shares, in mercy drew me to His feet.
'Twas thus the FIRST-ONE gave me grace : O RAPTURE ! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 32

IX.

Saves me with a Mother's love.

With those that knew not right or good,—men ignorant,—I wandered too.
The First, the Primal Lord Himself threefold pollution caus'd to cease ;
Even me He took as something worth,—like dog in sumptuous litter borne !
'Twas thus the MOTHER gave me grace : O RAPTURE ! WHO SO BLEST AS I? 36

32. He is also the Self-existent, First, Eternal Being. See 'Fruit of Grace,' chap. i. 6. NOTE IV.
36. The Āiava doctrine is that the first exercise of grace on the part of the Supreme is through His Çatti (çakti = energy) ; which energy is personified as His inseparable Bride, and is the fountain of wisdom, of desire, and of action. Surely there is an analogy here with the Christian belief in the Holy Spirit proceeding forth to be the Author and Giver of life to the souls of men. 'Fruits of Divine Grace,' chap. i. 2, and NOTE XIII. See Lex. அம்மை.

¹ See Muir, vol. iii. p. 44, and note on 5. 245; also உண்மையின்கண், 84, and T. P. A., lxxxii. p. xl. 'From the ether of the supreme Brahma's heart, when he was plunged in meditation, there issued a sound, which is perceived (by the devout) when they close their organs of sense. By adoring this sound, devotees destroy the soul's threefold taint, extrinsic, inherent, and superhuman, and become exempt from future birth. From this sound sprang the ṣṅkāra, composed of three elements, self-resplendent, of imperceptible origin, that which is the emblem of the divine Brahma, the supreme spirit. He it is who hears this sound Piravavam (பிரணவம்), when the ears are insensible and the vision inactive,—through which speech is revealed, and which is manifested in the ether, from the Soul. This (ṣṅkāra) is the sensible exponent of Brahma, the self-sustained, the supreme spirit; and it is the eternal seed of the Vēdas, including all the Mantras and Upanishads. In this (ṣṅkāra) there were three letters, A and the rest, by which the three conditions, the (three) qualities, the (three) names, the (three) significations, the (three) states are maintained.' ¹ The word (காட்சி), in frequent use by Tira-Vaḷḷuvar, and other more recent South-Indian authors, literally means 'vision,' and is used to express that instinctive apprehension, or spiritual perception, of the right and true, that belongs only to devout souls. It takes the place of 'faith,' for which there is in pure Tamil no exact equivalent. It is to this faculty that the revelation of duty is assigned; and the following verse exhibits the sanctions of right conduct in a remarkable way:

'Ev'n when resources fail, they weary not of kindness due,
They to whom duty's self appears in VISION true.' (218)

This spiritual faculty may be injured by the dominance of the senses, and is only fully exercised by those who have attained to self-mastery:

'Men who have conquered sense, with sight from sordid VISION freed, Desire not other good, e'en in the hour of sorest need.' (174)

Again:

'The men of VISION pure, from wildering folly free,
Not e'en in thoughtless hour speak words of vanity.' (199)

In another place he talks of 'pure and passionless vision.' And again he says:

'Darkness departs, and rapture springs to men who see
The mystic VISION pure, from all delusion free.' (352)

And:

'Though troubles press, no shameful deeds they do
Whose eyes the ever-during VISION view.' (654)

Hence to the Tamil poet duty is nothing arbitrary, but is the revelation to purged eyes of that which is within the veil.
